

TWO JAILED AS RUMMERS

Hills Police Confiscate 30 Gallons of Alleged Whiskey

One man is in the Oakland County jail today under bail of $1500 on a charge of transporting liquor and his companion has paid a fine of $25 on a drunkenness charge following their arrest and the confiscation of 30 gallons of alleged moonshine whiskey by Bloomfield Hills police.

Patrolman James Banks stopped the car the men were driving Thursday night when it passed the red traffic signal at Woodward avenue and the Long Lake road. A search of the car revealed the liquor.

The man in jail is Ernest Bailey. Clarence Bunting paid the fine on a drunk charge. Both live in Flint.

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—

Richard Hedke, of Detroit, governor for the twenty-third district of Rotary International: "Birmingham is to be congratulated upon its civic center, its very wonderful library, and its new municipal building. The people of Birmingham, if I may judge by their municipal building program, certainly are an idealistic and provident citizenry."

PRESIDENT'S SILENCE RIVALLED BY SARGENT

By CHARLES P. STEWART
Washington Correspondent for Central Press and The Eccentric
Washington.—Considering his enormous size, Attorney General

John Garibaldi Sargent probably is the least conspicuous individual who ever filled an important position in Washington.

Ordinarily the attorney general of the United States is in the limelight a great deal, whether he likes it or not. If he tries to keep out of it, it simply is turned on him and follows him around.

It bothered Harlan F. Stone, John G.'s predecessor, like sixty. It illuminated Harry Daugherty to a fare-thee-well. By its glare, Mitchell Palmer, barely escaped being blown up by a bomb.

But "Jawn," as President Coolidge calls him, has the trick of doing a fade-away, with the beam pointing right at him. For a man who misses being a regular circus giant by a mighty narrow margin, it is miraculous almost.

Be it understood, the attorney general takes the leading part in a vast number of the government's most sensational activities. He handles all of Uncle Sam's law business for him—civil and criminal.

He does an immense amount of investigating, and finds out all sorts of perfectly thrilling things. He turns up anti-trust law violations. He digs into oil leases. Occasionally he sends a powerful federal official to jail. He prosecutes big bootleggers.

The reportorial craft has had varying degrees of luck with past attorneys general, but it can hardly be said that the newspaper men ever have drawn an absolute blank until "Jawn's" justice department regime.

If John G. Sargent ever told a correspondent anything more enlightening than that he "didn't know" what the latter was trying to find out, I have failed to see it in print.

By ragging all his subordinates, from his first assistant down to the junior office boy, concerning the slightest detail of their official tasks, and by pleading ignorance insofar as he himself is concerned, of anything, Attorney General Sargent has spread a blanket of secrecy a foot thick over the justice department's doings, from the inconsequential to the most momentous, in the last three and a half years.

The natural inference is that "Jawn" really knows infinitely more than he admits concerning what is going on under his administration.

And yet his appearance of genuine, fatuous inability to answer any imaginable question, relative to subjects upon which it seems impossible that he can be uninformed, is almost too convincing to be doubted.

The sight of Attorney General Sargent in the act of being interviewed—by twenty or thirty correspondents at once—is one not soon to be forgotten.

Behold the scribes!—alert and inquisitive.

Behold the attorney general!—a prodigious old Vermonter, nearly six and a half feet tall—not fat, but massive in proportion. His manner and expression, while amiable, are bovine. And just as nearly as he can come to it, without putting it precisely into that monosyllabic, in response to each query shot at him, his rejoinder is, "Moo."

Arrested for stealing a bicycle, 12-year-old Charles Lansing of St. Louis said he took it to ride to Australia.

AUTO HITS BUS, GIRL INJURED

Driver Loses Control When Front Tire Blows Out On Woodward

A Pontiac girl received cuts and bruises and her companion escaped without hurts when the car in which they were riding Sunday blew out a tire and crashed into the rear of a motor bus parked at Woodward avenue and Brown street.

The girl is Irene Minnis, 237 south Paddock street. Her companion, Walter Habin, 214 west Rundell street, Pontiac, was driving the car. Miss Minnis was taken home after receiving first aid at the Birmingham police station.

A front tire blew out and he lost control of the car, Habin told Patrolman Harry Johnson who investigated.

Columbus, Ind., has an accommodating policeman. Al Billings stopped him, admitted being drunk and asked to be kicked. The cop complied with pleasure.
