AMONG THE WOMEN

Village Dentist One Girl In Class Of Men

By DOROTHY E. WILLIAMS
Registration was in progress in the dental school of a large mid-western university. There were long lines of students consulting instructors, signing up for courses, paying fees. Everywhere there were young men, puzzling over college bulletins and long sheets of class programs and in their midst there was a girl who also wanted to be a dentist. She was a pretty girl, with a soft voice and very bright eyes. The line wound its way up to the desk and it came the girl's turn to present her election blanks to the dean, a stern gentleman of the old school, known to his pupils as "Nellie."

"Why do you want to be a dentist?" he belloved.

Likes Science
"Because I like science and because I like to work with my hands," was her reply. The dean was silent, but it was with reluctance that he approved her election blank. And so she began her profession.

"The girl is now known as Dr. Caryl Kulsavage. She is located in the Wabek building and the distinction of being one of Birmingham's two women dentists. Even now she is confronted by that question, "How did you ever come to study dentistry?" Her answer is much the same as it was that registration day at Ann Arbor: because of her interest in science and because she likes intricate manual work.

Dentistry has always been the principal thing in her life. She is the wife of one of Detroit's leading dentists and together they have kept abreast of the progress in their field. But more and more, Dr. Kulsavage has concentrated her interests in children's dentistry. Incidentally she is the mother of two children, six and eight years of age.

"If the public would only come to regard the dentist as a consultant during childhood, rather than wait until later, it would be much better. Every child should visit a dentist regularly from the time he is two and a half," she said.

Preventive Tendency
"There is the same tendency in the dental field today as in the medical, the tendency to do preventive work. I know of one dentist who has such faith in preventive methods that if parents will bring their children to him once every month for examination, he will promise to take care of any dental repair work free of charge as long as the children are under his care."

In her opinion there is not enough attention paid to the first set of teeth. "Some people believe that it is useless to fill the first set of teeth. They do not realize that the decay from a first tooth may pass on the second set of teeth that are coming in. If the tooth becomes abscessed the poison passes into the system and often causes heart trouble." She pointed out that heart trouble among children is so prevalent. "This is largely caused by decaying, abscessed teeth. Many cases of malnutrition are traceable to this same cause."

Heredity Strong
The type of teeth an individual has is hereditary, she believes, but to a great measure abnormal development of the jaws may be prevented. "That is one of the chief reasons for consulting a dentist during early childhood. The dentist can often foresee ugly developments of teeth and jaw and correct them. It does not seem to be common knowledge that much of this distorted development is caused by childhood habits such as sucking a finger. There are even cases of receding chins laid to 'pillow pushing,' as dentists term it. This is an instance where the child sleeps during the formative years with his face buried in a pillow." She also mentioned the embarrassment and undesirable psychological effect on the individual whose jaw has developed in a distorted manner. Diet plays a great part in the forming of good teeth," she said. Although Dr. Kulsavage does not go so far as to dictate her patients diet, she does stress the importance of carefully balanced meals of the right kind of foods. "Vegetables, greens and fruits are most important in the diet. And there is one thing which I find few persons know. The water in which the vegetable is cooked is of considerable value because of the mineral salts. It should be saved and used for broths and soups."

But her life is not merely theoretical. She brings these same theories into practice at her home at Green Lake, a small settlement near Orchard Lake. There she spends considerable time gardening, for as she says, she is a person of varied interests. Dr. Kulsavage practices in Birmingham Monday, Wednesday and Saturdays. She is a native of Detroit, a graduate of Central high school and of the dental school at the University of Michigan. She is a member of the Detroit A. A. U. W.

ARE NEWSPAPER MEN IN REAL LIFE LIKE THEY ARE portrayed in The Front Page? Is their speech so often filled with swear words? Do they go off pay days on a grand spree eventually to be dragged from a Turkish bath by their wives? Do they address city, county and state officials by the regal title, "Tab of guts"? These questions and many more have been put to me since the invasion of Michigan's Holy Land, Detroit, by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur's farce. I have not failed so far to essay a contemplative frown and reply with studied carefulness, "Wal, they's some as does 'in their'se some as doesn't." And now let the matter rest.

The most profound comment the play has brought forth so far comes from the pen of the erudite Prof. Dr. Oscar Odd McIntyre, of Gallipolis, O., who recently assumed the chair of dramatic criticism for the magazine Life. Representative McIntyre says it is "A rowdy libel on a noble calling." So there!

Which would- You choose?

YOU would select the well-planted home, of course, for you appreciate that a house is not a home until it is surrounded by beautiful trees, shrubs, flowers, vines, etc. They are necessary to create an atmosphere of comfort, happiness and prosperity.

Truly, the house upon bare or poorly planted grounds is only a house—"It's Not a Home Until It's Planted."
