Mrs. Bruce Millar Seen As 'Typical' Villager

By DOROTHY E. WILLIAMS

Mrs. Mary Kimball Millar, who has recently moved to Franklin village from Birmingham, might easily be termed typical of Birmingham's young married set. She is a charming young mother, who before her marriage to Bruce Millar, followed a profession of considerable interest.

For two years she was employed by the Michigan department of health in Lansing, traveling all over the southern part of the state doing statistical work. For the most part her dealings were with delinquent girls.

Although she was still in her early twenties while employed by the state she often was advising girls years older than herself. Here was a position that required tact and diplomacy, but always there was her winning personality to help her through the most difficult situations. She knew people and how to win their confidence.

Childhood in East

There had never been anything strikingly unusual about Mary Kimball's childhood. She was born in 1897 in Danvers, a little same town she received her public school education, later entering Simmons college in Cambridge. She lived a life common to any child born in such surroundings; school days in Danvers and in the summer long vacations at Baker's Island, just off the coast of Salem, Mass. But Mary Kimball had a hobby which was common to any child born in such surroundings; school days in Danvers and in the summer long vacations at Baker's Island, just off the coast of Salem, Mass. Receives Bachelor's Degree

As she grew older, her interest centered more and more in people and their health problems until in 1920 she graduated from Simmons with a bachelor of science degree in public health. She had always played a prominent part in campus activities in her college days. "And I believe that my work in college organizations was invaluable to me in my later dealings with girls," she said. "Although I was later to work with an entirely different type person, still it acquainted me to a great extent with people and taught me how to mix with them on an agreeable basis. I know that campus activities are in a way

Frederick Fenton, aged 85, of New Orleans, has married the fifth time, his bride being a woman of 42.

Ignorance is largely responsible for any poor health conditions which may be prevalent," she said. "I am convinced that the only way intelligently to fight such conditions is to give instruction at an earlier age. I look for considerable good work from the new plan of placing deans at the head of high schools. Such a plan always there to advise and counsel the girls and boys of high school age is bound to produce a good effect on the school groups and the community as a whole. It is bound to improve conditions, especially in the larger cities."

Mrs. Millar is still intensely interested in public health work and hopes to continue work in that field. She has also done case work at the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where she and Mr. Millar made their home immediately after their marriage. She is an active member of the Birmingham American Association of University Women.
