"GARDEN FROCKS" WHICH MOTHER WORE ARE BACK IN STYLE AMONG THE STYLISH

MIDSUMMER brings back the old-time "garden frocks."

Millady doesn't really need a garden nor even garden parties to wear garden frocks. But it was the ceremonial of the quaint functions called garden parties that created the demand for these frilly, feminine, soft-looking and very cool little dresses that have been sadly missing in late years.

Now they are again.
Recently, at the Ascot races and the garden parties at Ascot, there were more dainty little frocks than sports costumes. In fact, if women did not appear in this type of costume they felt quite out of it.

In America at beaches, country clubs, home parties and for afternoon wear when women feel like dressing up prettily, one or two frilly little dresses are indispensable.

Organdie is very good, printed chiffon is even more popular. Printed taffeta, lace, worsted, beaute and handkerchief linen with organdie frills all are in use.

Waistlines are very prominent, since these are feminine costumes and the very feminine figure today acknowledges waistlines. Soft color treatments, many full skirts, with flounces, pleats or dipping panels are quite necessary.

One very smart and new and different is made of off white taffeta with a figure of a bunch of blue and white flowers in it. It is new in several ways. There is a little bolero jacket of the fabric with long sleeves that flare with a circular flounce for cuffs. This is posed over a sleeveless princess frock with a point in the back like an old-time bustle. From under the point there is a flaring, floating panel below the hemline. Lace is very good. One new pale orchid blue dress is very, very princess in cut with flaring skirt below the tightly fitted waistline and hips.

When organdie is used, all manner of old-time trimmings are brought into play, too. Ruchings are one of the very best bets. A flesh colored organdie frock, with three tiers to its skirt that dips

Types of afternoon frocks popular this season are, left, a white taffeta with a bolero jacket, center, a fruit organdie of edged tiers, however, to note that quite as many short frocks are worn with sleeveless boleros and then legging-like frocks as long ones.

When garden frocks are made of figured chiffon, it is very good to have the print colorful and light looking, but on a dark background. Navy blue, black, brown and even soft dark green make good backgrounds. The squarish long scarf that looks like a shawl is bordered in plain green. A parasol of black lace is used with this frock.

For young girls these party dresses are best made of washable materials. Voiles, dotted swiss, dimities and any other obtainable fabric is excellent. There is a trend towards Empire line for young girls, with berthas and puff short sleeves and then legging-like skirts with many ruffles. And, strange as it may seem, legging-like hats are in again, as they were when mother was young. And in precisely the same manner it is "fashionable" to have a rose under the brim.

WOMAN'S CROWNING GLORY IS LOVELIEST IN SUMMER

By MADAME RUBINSTEIN

Every summer I find myself confronted with new aspects of the age-old "hairsty" problem. "What shall I do about my hair?" Woman's crowning glory seems to be during the summer season that at any other time of year—judging from the letters that have been pouring into my New York office recently. Last year it was the question, "shall I bob or not?" This year the questions are stated more generally. Women seemed to have settled the question of long or short hair to suit themselves. And now they want to know how to keep their hair long or short, in a healthy, beautiful condition.

I confess that I find myself surprised to learn that so many women are troubled with the matter of hair health in the summer. If there is one season when a woman's hair should be loveliest naturally than at any other season, it is during the warm weather. To be sure, there is no time of year when hair cannot be well-groomed and beautiful, but in the summer nature offers it distinct advantages. If your hair is not lovely at this season, it is because you are not making use of these privileges.

Summer wind and air is a tremendous aid to hair beauty. Hair that blows in a summer breeze is hair that is wind-tossed and sun-kissed—should be healthy hair, whether it be long or short.

All winter long your hair has been cooped up under little hats of felt, fashionable hats, to be sure, but none the less hard to wear. To be sure, there is no time of year when hair cannot be styled, close to your head. It has been permitted to breathe and exercise, except what you give it by brushing or massage. And the tiny muscles at the roots of your hair need exercise, too. Such exercise as they get when your hair is tossed by a vigorous breeze, when it is lifted and blown. There is one thing that you can do for your hair this summer that you cannot do so easily at any other season. You can let it breathe. Take off your hat whenever possible. If your hair is long, plan to give it regular sun-and-air baths, on your porch, in your yard, or on the bathing beach. Take it down and let the fresh summer wind fill it with new health and beauty.

Style Whimsies

Three-quarter-length coats are the choice of Parisiennes for winter wear over the long, full skirts.

The pajama sandal, fashioned after the beach sandals, are elaborated for fall wear and made adaptable for the dance floor. Usually white fabrics are employed so that they may be dyed to match any costume.

Safeguard Food to Safeguard Health!

Science has proved beyond doubt the necessity for keeping foods at a temperature below 50 degrees, and of constantly maintaining this condition. Above this point, foods spoil rapidly. Unceasingly vigilant, an electric refrigerator keeps foods fresh and wholesome in a dry cold that is always uniform. In hottest summer weather, the temperature is unchanged. Day after day, year after year, an electric refrigerator provides unflinching automatic refrigeration. No attention is necessary other than an occasional defrosting.

SUMMER ACCESSORIES ARE IMPORTANT

By FRANCES CLYNE

Fashion Ever for Central Press The ever-increasing simplicity of the body of the wardrobe—the gown, coat and hat, permits considerable leeway in the using of accessories. It is in these, in fact, even more than in the main garments, that a woman can play her imagination and, incidentally, her taste; for no portion of the wardrobe contains more pitfalls than the choosing of accessories. They must be distinctive, they must be appropriate, they must serve to strike a note without in any way detracting from the effect of the ensemble as a whole and, moreover, they, too, must remain simple. That constitutes quite a large problem from which to emerge victorious, but a few guideposts along the way may help to simplify the task.

A good general rule to follow is that you can never go far astray by choosing bag, hat and shoes in solid colors when the dress, itself, is polka dotted, striped or otherwise conspicuously designed. On the other hand, with a solidly colored dress or hat, more pattern may be allowed in the accessories worn in conjunction. This summer one must be particularly aware of the possibilities of good or evil of the embroidered shoes, brilliant scarfs and unneeded jewelry which, when worn individually, will make a woman look like a heathen if incorrectly combined.

Match or Blend Hat, Shoes, Bag Hat, shoes and bag should usually match or blend, and many stores are showing such triumvirates for sports, wear. Gloves and stockings of the same tone, or scarfs and bags of the same material, make a tasteful touch in conjunction with light summer dresses. Wooden jewelry with tailored suits is especially smart this year, while for evening, any number of unusual effects may be achieved through the use of jewelry with the striking ornament flung out the side of the decolletage in the back of a modern evening gown may lend as much character to the wear as the gown itself while a huge floating handkerchief of chiffon, tied about the wrist, may turn a simple evening gown into a commanding one.

Perfume is an important accessory for summer, but it is better to omit it entirely than to make an unwise choice. Summer perfume should be light and delicate, and heavy or exotic musk scents are out, however appropriate they might be to the weather during the winter. The substitution of times should solve the question for those to whom flowery scents are unappealing.
