

MONEY SAVING PLAN IS GIVEN

Moulthrop Suggests Wholesale Purchase Of Supplies

A suggestion that Birmingham can save a sum of money annually through the wholesale purchase of its sewer crock and water pipe was contained in a letter to the village commission, written by R. C. Moulthrop, of the local lumber and builders' supply company bearing his name, and read Monday night by the village clerk, Myrtle Carson. According to Mr. Moulthrop, by placing a quantity order for a year's supply when the market is low, and receiving a guarantee against price increase, the village will be able to secure its sewer and water main installations at a savings over the present method, in which contractors' bids include current prices.

It was also suggested by Mr. Moulthrop that the village give some cooperative aid to Birmingham businessmen in general when placing for bids on its various projects. "I speak not merely for my own company, but for entire business interests of the village; we all feel that, all things being equal, the money expended by the village to carry on its affairs should be left in the community that furnishes the taxes," he stated.

With The Women Of Today

feather we left for Stockholm, Sweden. I remained there for about a month, but my money was rapidly diminishing. I was forced to work, so I set sail for Germany. There I met an old friend, Gen. Alexander Pototski, former Commander of Artillery on the South Russian front against the Turks. It was he who suggested that I re-enter Red Cross work.

In Charge of Camps
The next day the General took her to the chief of the Interallied Commission and she was given a position in charge of two prison camps, one at Zossen and one at Wandorf, both in the vicinity of Berlin.

"There were approximately 25,000 Russian prisoners in these two camps, demoralized by the revolution and neglected by authorities," she explained. Camp conditions were deplorable. Food was poor, clothing almost in rags and sanitation was practically non-existent.

"The food for the most part was boiled beets, as the Germans themselves were on a starvation diet. The hospitals offered no adequate care of the sick, with several hundred lying in the village; we all without proper care or food. It was my duty to better these conditions. Hospitals were equipped, better food provided and physicians obtained to aid in the work."

When her organization worked with these two camps had been finished the Interallied Commission placed her in charge of all the prison camps in Germany, to look after the Russian prisoners who numbered approximately 450,000 men.

"Russia had just gone through a revolution and conditions in prison camps were poor," she said. "Most of the prisoners were clamoring to return to Russia, not realizing that they were better off under the care of the Commission. Riots broke out in several camps when repeated delays prevented their return to Russia. The soldiers could not understand why they should be kept in Germany after the Armistice. The real cause of the riots, however, was due to the Bolsheviks, who did not wish to risk the transportation cost of troops whose loyalty to them was untested."

BOUGHT FOR TWENTY-FOUR DOLLARS

History tells us Hendrik Hudson bought the little island of Manhattan for Twenty-Four Dollars. Since then, much has happened. The photo shows how the nose of Manhattan (The Battery) looks from an aeroplane. Where once trees grew in profusion, tall massive steel structures rear their heads into the skies. The Hudson River washes one side, the East River the other, and New York Harbor is in the middle. How many million dollars the little island that was bought for Twenty-Four Dollars, is now worth, few if any really appraisers can tell. Billions, however, could not buy it now. (Herbert N. Y.)

AD SIGN PLACED FOR AVIATORS

Company Places Flat Bill-Board Near Ford Airport

On the outskirts of Detroit, near the Ford airport, the Standard Oil company (Indiana) has erected a large painted bulletin advertising its products to those who travel by air. This board, over fifty feet long by fifteen feet high and is set at an angle of forty-five degrees to make it easily read by those who fly over the area and also clearly visible to the motorists who drive along the highway nearby.

This is an advertising innovation. It is called the first purely commercial bulletin ever built, the primary purpose of which is to catch the attention of that rapidly expanding public who have become air minded.

The decision of the Standard Oil company (Indiana) to utilize this unique form of advertising is an eloquent expression of their belief that aviation is on the eve of tremendous expansion, and that transportation by air soon will be a commonplace means of getting from one part of the country to another.

The location of this bulletin is such that a large number of the airplanes that come and go from the Ford field pass near enough to it to enable those who ride to see and read the message.

The development of these bulletins is a natural evolution from the airway markers which were originated and first put in service by the Standard Oil company (Indiana) several years ago. These markers, which are painted on the roofs of the company's warehouses throughout the Central States, carry the name of the town, compass reading and directions to the airport, if one is located within a few miles of the sign.

The favorable reception which these markers received, not alone from those interested in aviation,

VILLAGE BOYS AT NORTH CAMP

Several Birmingham boys are attending the session of Camp Carlevoix on the lake of the same name in northern Michigan. Among those at the camp from the village are Tim Neal, Ralph Thomas, John Bagby, Gann Kinnerson, Adrian Newman, James Owens, Martin Owens, John Parson, William Pratt, Frederick Smith, Robert Utter, William Van Every, Morris Winborn, and Arthur Brandt.

NEW WATER PIPE BREAK REPORTED

No ill effects were suffered by Birmingham from a break in a temporary water pipe from the new Derby well which occurred last Friday and was discovered by John Purvis, chief engineer. It was repaired by Purvis after some water had flown from the tank. The water supply was not hampered and it was not necessary to bring the reserve pumps into play.

professionally, but also from the layman who chanced to fly over and see how practically useful they are, led the management of the Standard Oil company to believe that advertising signs displayed to be viewed from above would impress those who saw them.

To what extent these airway sign boards will be utilized by the Standard Oil company has not been announced, but it is safe to say that as aviation progresses, and air travel becomes the ordinary means of transportation for the busy man, this form of out-of-door advertising will become popular.

STORM COSTS DRIVER $25
