Here's the tiny "mercury racer" plane of Lieutenant Alford J. Williams, inset, U. S. navy, which he is to pilot in the international speed race in England in September. It looks more like a mosquito than a plane, doesn't it? It went 110 miles an hour on the water near Annapolis without leaving the surface. Lieutenant Williams believes he will be able to smash the world's record of 318 miles an hour and perhaps go 400 miles an hour. The plane has 24 cylinders, 48 sparkplugs, four carburetors and for distributors and can develop 1100 horsepower. It weighs 4,400 pounds.
