

SERVANT HELD FOR LARCENY

William Barnes, 25, Stole $200 From Mrs. Meyer's Home, Police Report

William Barnes, 25 years old, a Negro chauffeur employed by John Meyer, 2195 West Maple road, will be brought for examination tomorrow before Judge Floyd S. Buck on a charge of stealing $200 from Mrs. Meyer's home.

Barnes was arrested on a grand larceny warrant obtained by Mrs. Meyer after an investigation by Birmingham police.

Mrs. Meyer reported that on Dec. 3, while she was entertaining guests in her home, she left seven $50 bills in a small mahogany box on the mantle shelf in her bedroom and that when she returned she discovered four of the bills had been stolen.

Barnes, the police say, has a criminal record, having been sentenced from one to eight years for grand larceny at Jeffersonville, Ind., in 1921. When arraigned before Judge Buck Dec. 6, Barnes pleaded not guilty and was held in lieu of $2,000 bond.

"A Nut At Large"

(Editor's Note: Last week The Eccentric published an editorial, "The Soo Political Comet," in which it took the opportunity to criticize Chase S. Osborn, of Sault Sainte de Marie, former Governor of Michigan, for his attack upon Senator James Couzens. When the Northville Record of last week reached our desk, we were impressed with the sentiment of editor Elton R. Eaton, for four years secretary to ex-Governor Alexander Hays Sault Ste. Marie, the quick-witted Northville publisher thinks of Mr. Osborn, in an editorial entitled "A Nut At Large.")

A NUT AT LARGE
Many people have long thought that Chase Osborn was "nutty" to use a slang expression of the streets. Judging from a silly editorial that he recently wrote about Senator James Couzens and is now broadcasting it about the state on printed slips, folks must be right in their opinion of the "Soo freak."

Not only is the editorial of an assinine character, but it gives one an idea of the deception that Chase Osborn will practice to put an opponent in a false light. In view of the fact that the former governor has started this early campaign against Couzens, it is pretty evident that he has a desire to run for the United States senate against Couzens or else he is paving the way for someone else to get into the contest.

So that Record readers may know what it is all about, following is the article that has been sent through the mail to all newspapers in the state by the former governor:

John D. Pays Double

"From the Evening News, Sault Ste. Marie, November 23, 1929. Osborn Brands Couzens as 'Vagilating Wet.' Declares that His Criticism is Hurled at the Senator, not the Individual.
"Declaring that Senator Couzens is a 'vagilating wet' and his attacks on Andrew Mellon were to save paying taxes and not on principle, Chase S. Osborn has replied to Senator Couzens who recently wrote a letter to George A. Osborn, editor and publisher of The Evening News, commenting on an editorial appearing in this paper.

The Editorial
"In the editorial Mr. Osborn had stated that a lot of people call Mr. Couzens Jim and Jimmy behind his back but few do to his face if any. 'For Couzens is a queer man,' he wrote. 'He has no education, but he has a lot of courage. He is a prime individual and likes to fight. No man works for him anywhere. He didn't care much for the money the government was after him for, but wished to do as he pleased with it.'

"So it was the government who was really compelled to donate the millions for child relief in Michigan.
"Couzens likes to take a drink of whiskey. The nearest he comes in that direction to a compromise is to open the door to light wines and beer knowing full well that the other shall follow."

"Dear Mr. Osborn:—
"Your paper was kind enough to send me an editorial published in your paper October 28, 1929, entitled 'The Vagilating Wet.' I have read the editorial with much interest because it indicates you are wise and is at variance with many things that Honorable Chase Osborn has said to me personally. While I understand that the Honorable Chase Osborn takes no active part in any publication, I think he was more familiar with some of my views on public questions than the writer of this editorial.

"The conclusions of the editorial are in such strange contrast with the facts that I thought I should say to you that whatever I have accomplished in the several years of my life has been due to co-operation and organization and not to individualism. My majority service in Detroit was at least partly marked by organization.

"I accomplished the results that the people had long sought. Mr. Henry Ford will not state that I did not co-operate with him for nearly thirteen years.
"However, it is quite evident that you desire me out of this office and such being the case there is hardly anything I could say that would change your views. Nevertheless I thank you for sending me the editorial because it undoubtedly expresses the views of yourself and perhaps some others.
"Very truly yours,
"Signed JAMES COUZENS."

Osborn's Reply
"Dear Senator Couzens:
"You poised and temperate letter to my school publishes the Sault News and the Fresno (California) Republican, has been forwarded to me. I wrote the editorial you refer to. Any Criticism in it is directed to Couzens, senator and not to Couzens, citizen. There is a distinction. I believe you see and acknowledge this. You are correct in concluding that I do not wish you to be a U. S. senator. You are a vagilating wet. I am an uncompromising dry. You attack Mellon for whom I have no brief, to save paying taxes and not on principle. Nor have you earned the office senator. And you have not functioned valuably as one. Personally I like you. Politically I am opposed to you.
"Yours sincerely,
"CHASE S. OSBORN."

"Now that you have read the editorial and Chase Osborn's letter in which he accepts the responsibility for writing the editorial, let us for a moment analyze the editorial.
"Couzens is a queer man, he has no education," says Osborn.
"This is a falsehood. Couzens has a far greater knowledge of affairs, a far better education of things practical and worthwhile than the boob from up at the Soo. Possibly the senator as a young man did not have the opportunity to gain a university education, but he has been one of the great world leaders like Edison, Ford, Firestone and Schwab who have gained their knowledge like Couzens outside university halls—and no man can dispute the statement that some of the world's best educated men never had the opportunity to attend college. Senator Couzens is one of them.

"No team work for him," declares the Soo editor.
"We wonder if Osborn means that because Senator Couzens had the courage to take up the battle in behalf of the people in the senate, that he didn't team in with those who sought to benefit so-called vested interests at the expense of the little fellow?
"We wonder if he means by that that Senator Couzens should be censured for revealing to the public the scheme of a certain group of eastern manufacturers to work out a tariff law that was for their interest rather than the poor devil back in Michigan who works for a living?"

"We wonder if Editor Chase Osborn thinks that Senator Couzens should be censured for revealing to the people of this country the trickery of the Connecticut senator who hired as his private secretary an official of a group of manufacturers so that these manufacturers might have inside information as to what the senate was doing on proposed tariff measures—information that the little business man and the man who toils for a living are deprived of?"
"He didn't care much for the money the government was after him for, but he wished to do as he pleased with it," writes Osborn.
"How much fairer it would have been for the warped-minded Soo editor to have said that Mellon drew Mellon to punish Senator Couzens by collecting an income tax that the government was not entitled to because Couzens had dared oppose Mellon in one of his income tax schemes to benefit the very rich of the east. The courts of this country decided that Couzens was right and that Mellon was wrong in this matter. How much better it would have been if Chase Osborn had told just the simple truth about this case—but truth is a thing that Osborn apparently doesn't know much about."
"So it was the government who was really compelled to donate the millions for child relief in Michigan," writes Osborn.
"The vicious, cowardly attacks upon a man's liberality with wealth he has honestly accumulated, the worthy desire of Senator Couzens to punish Senator Couzens for the coming generation of Michigan, that paragraph is about the limit.
"Chase Osborn has a lot of nerve" to discuss a thing of this character, especially in view of his career of do-nothing for boys and girls and his own domestic life.
"The voters of Michigan once gave Chase Osborn a chance to display his ability to serve the public. His destructive and idiotic ideas threw the state into the worst turmoil it has known in years, and to get rid of him after one brief term a state overwhelming Republican elected a Democrat for governor.
"The less Osborn discusses the character work of Senator Couzens seemingly the better for the rich, selfish editor of the Soo."
"Now we are told that the best brains of all falsehoods written by Michigan's "nutty" ex-governor.
"Couzens likes to take a drink of whiskey. The nearest he comes in that direction to a compromise is to open the door to light wines and beer, knowing full well that the other shall follow."
"Possibly being a hypocrite himself, Chase Osborn likes to put others in the same class, because there can be no other excuse for such a flagrant misstatement of facts as the above paragraph.
"The people of Michigan know well the ideas of Senator Couzens on this question. The Senator more than once has made clear his position. He does not drink, as Osborn would have us believe. And he is not the hypocrite that Osborn is. Senator Couzens has been one of the few men of the country to respect the dry laws of this nation, something that Chase Osborn probably cannot honestly claim he has done. In fact, the driest of the drys has not observed the prohibition law more closely than has Senator Couzens.
"Senator Couzens some years ago frankly stated what a lot of ardent drys have often thought, that possibly a legal sale of light wines and beer might do away with the mess this country is in due to its inability to control the alcohol.
"It was simply a thought that he expressed at that time—honestly made by an honest man—and not by a two-faced man who is now trying to inject into the coming senatorial campaign in Michigan an issue that is as foreign to it as the peanog question of Florida.
"Senator Couzens states in his letter to Osborn that he is "uncompromisingly dry."
"Just note the viciousness and trickery of Osborn—for he sends out this batch of propaganda under the heading "Couzens a Vagilating Wet."
"Portable telephones have been devised for plugging into special wired sockets about the house.
