There is a Growing Demand for Valley Fruit

A MAGIO quality to the Lower Rio Grande valley soil produces citrus fruits of superior quality. Valley grape-fruit are as sweet as oranges grown in most other citrus sections while the valley's oranges and lemons and limes are famed for the extra amount of juice they contain.

The demand for Valley fruit has far exceeded the supply, while the nation's per capita consumption of citrus fruits increases capita consumption of citrus fruits increases annually. Eighty-two per cent of the 60,000 acres in the Valley now planted to citrus are in grapefruit. Valley grapefruit has been marketed in practically every state in the country and in several foreign countries, yet, in spite of the marked increase in plantings in recent years, experts agree that the industry in the Valley is only in its infancy.

Let us tell you of our plan for taking you to see the Valley. Excursions leave Detroit
