DRUNKENNESS AS CRIME SOURCE
 From Christian Science Monitor
 "In the days of pioneering, the manufacture of liquor was carried on by an enterprise in thriftiness," declares Dr. Robert M. Good, president of the School of the Ozarks and veteran backhills social worker and educator. "Having no facilities for canning and but scant means of drying his fruit, the frontiersman would frequently turn his cherries, raspberries, apples and other fruits to brandies, and his unmarketable surplus of corn, rye or barley to stronger liquor."
 "Naturally the backhills country did not prosper, as did the valley lands and moreover roads were few and rugged that to market bulky or perishable commodities such as fruit and grain was almost impossible. But by manufacturing whiskey the hill people had a marketable article, easy to transport by horseback.

 "During the last three years the extensive state road building campaigns launched by both Arkansas and Missouri in their mountain districts have brought transportation by wagon or automobile facilities to fully 90 per cent of the rural hill population."
 "Experimental statistics gathered recently by student workers of this school indicate the marketed output of poultry and eggs, fruit, dairy products and corn from these backhills regions has approximately doubled since the coming of the new roads and that legitimate manufacture of liquors has decreased proportionately.

 "An illustration of the practical and ethical expediency of the new roads may be had from the 'old wine trail' which until 1920 had been the travel route from Forsythe, county seat of Taney County, Mo., to Springfield, Mo., Ozark marketing city. By the old trail the distance of 50 miles was considered a four days' trip and involved fording the one river 22 times." By means of the new highway the trip can be made easily in four hours and approximately $3,000,000 worth of farm produce has been carried over the route to market this year.

During the period from 1919 to 1924 these "wildhills" hill counties maintained an annual average of 75 arrests for moonshining. In 1922 this number increased to 112, as county records show. But from January 1 to August 15 of the present year there have been but two arrests for manufacturing whiskey and circuit court records show that during this time not a single felony has been committed in either county!
 A similar instance is provided in Madison County, Arkansas, which was at one time known as one of the greatest moonshining areas of the Ozark country. In 1922 a roadbuilding project was completed which gave the county a total of 225 miles of improved highway. Since January of 1923 there have been but nine arrests in the county for the manufacture of liquors and official court records show that the county has not had a single case of larceny, burglary or murder since that time.

"Drunkennes has always been the most active source of crime in the hill country," Dr. Good states.
SOME DOCTORING
 The midnight blonde debutante who claims a certain New York movie studio was cursing the fate that had prompted her to bestow her hand and heart on "prob'ly de finest niggah in de whole o' Harlem."
 "She paused to smooth a wrinkle in her champagne-colored hose." "Ah guss 'bout de best thing Ah kin do," she said, "is take dat baby to de doctor an' hab him psycho-analitized!"
