A Real Horsewoman

Five-year-old Mary was relating how she had ridden on the wooden horse at the village fair. "And did they strap you on so you wouldn't fall off?" asked her mother. "Strap me? Oh, no!" replied Mary indignantly. "They tied the horse to me so he couldn't run away."

"How do you like the country?" asked the guide. "Brother," replied Sam, his teeth chattering, "this ain' no country. This am a exaggerated Indianapolis, robbers ransacked the house while he looked on."

After hiding the wooden legs of William Netherton, a criss of Indianapolis, robbers ransacked the house while he looked on.
