

LIBRARIANS OFFER PLAN TO MAKE READING EASY FOR CHILDREN

Boys and girls! Here is a plan that makes a game out of summer reading. A puzzle-story which contains 65 titles of well-known children books is being circulated among the young villagers by the Baldwin Public Library. It will replace last summer's reading club plan, according to Miss Gertrude Mandy, children's librarian.

Already considerable interest has been shown, with a large number of the children coming to the library for reference work in discovering the hidden names of the books in the story.

"Many children unfamiliar with the card index have come to the library to use it for solving the story," she said.

The children are asked to write out the names of the books and their authors, then to read any eight of the list, making a record of some interesting point in each book. At the end of the summer, the book will be given to the boy or girl who submits the most complete list of titles with their authors and the best reports of the books selected.

The story follows: Hoory! No school to-morrow, said Dick Byrd to his friend Bruce as they left Oakleigh. Just then they met Jolly Stoger and Long-shanks. Now, where was Bobby? The four boys went to the secret garden and there they found him. "Let's get the magic map to plan the overland trail. We five will have to hurry if we get on to Oregon by midsummer," said one of the boys to his four friends.

As they were leaving the station on the train, pulled by the wonderful locomotive, Bruce said that he had brought his bugle. Longshanks said "Oh, I brought my jolly old whistle."

The first stop the boys made was at the Dandelion cottage. Here they hired Dusty Star Smoky, Silverfoot, Gay Neck and Nimble Legs to follow the trail of the Spanish horse. While on the trail the boys stopped to see Betty Lou of big log mountain. Betty Lou told them of Carolina's toy shop, where they could see the golden bird and the pig-tail of the Lee Benbow which had once belonged to the trumpeter of Krakow.

As they neared the toyshop they saw a little smoke coming from the chimney of a small tuckaway house. Inside the shop they found silent Scot with a tiny little girl helping him. The youngest rider, Bobby, exclaimed, "This is a real magic pawnshop."

"Look, a statue of the flying king of Kurio made from rainbow gold," cried Dick as he picked it up with his bare hands. They were all sorry to leave but they heard the warning whistle of their train, it seemed to say, "Northward ho!"

On arriving in Oregon at the ranch of the golden flowers, the Indians there seemed greatly upset about a little boy lost. Don, who had quit a scanty ride away through one of the three gates on the pope's mule. Don and his friend Deric with the Indians went up Treasure mountain to search for the runaway papoose. They found the little lad eating poppy seed cakes in sparrow house. There was a great rejoicing at the ranch when the hunters of the hills returned.

The five boys decided to go to nearby circus at Robin Hollow that afternoon. Gipsy Nan and Midge were the bareback riders. Behind the train boy was the javelin thrower. On the other side of the circus were lions 'n tigers 'n everything. They went to a side show to see Jiby Jones and his treasure chest.

Walter Pratt, of Southfield avenue, after playing in the golf tournament during the Exchange club convention at Port Huron Monday: "I know that I could have done better with my score had I been better acquainted with the course. However, I am glad to have played along with Doc Shaw, Harry Starr, and Lester Slusser; they offer, by example, excellent comparisons of golfing prowess."

A few days later they went to Hurricane Harbor to visit Prester John who had just returned from a trip around the world on the Derelict.

The boys' vacation went entirely too fast and it was soon time to return home.

When they told their parents about all the wonderful things they had seen, they felt as though they had traveled as much as the three boy scouts in Africa.
