On Idleness and Freedom

A complaint of many busy people today is that the demands of their work are so great that they are never free of it, that there is always something undone ahead of them.

And yet if we observe these people, we find that they get the most peace and contentment out of life. They are occupied constructively and every day brings them the satisfaction of accomplishment. They are building—and whether it is a mother who is occupied with her children or a man who is founding and building a business, each year shows the result of their labors in improvement and growth than they had in the year immediately preceding, or more conducive to satisfaction and happiness.

It is those who have nothing to do or not enough to do who are always dissatisfied. With those who have never been busy, with whom idling is an avocation, time is the cross they must bear, how to "kill" the time of their existence. Of all the people who are idle, the most must carry there is no heavy as the time that hangs on the hands of the idler.

But the people who are the most convincing answer to those of us who resent having "something undone ahead of us" are those who were busy workers and have at last achieved their ambition to be free from work and have the leisure to do the things they would like to do.

It is the same with every one of them. For a short time they enjoy their new "freedom." They go from one to another of the diversions and pleasures they had never had time to enjoy, "taking in" everything, the lack of which had ever caused them to be dissatisfied with their lot. But hardly have they run the gamut when it all begins to pall and they find the weight which hung on their hands heavier than any work they had ever to do. Witness the number of men who "retire" and before the year is out are back in business.

This reminds me, too, of the answer I heard one young mother give to another who envied her for having had three years of "freedom" before being "tied down" with a baby.

"The only thing you have to envy me for," she said, "is that having experienced such freedom I realize that I am missing nothing by being 'tied down'."

The girl who soon after her marriage was faced with the responsibility and work entailed by a baby thought of all the pleasures of which she had been deprived. But the one who had the opportunity to enjoy them realized how little she was missing.

Socially Correct

GENUINE Engraving lends a personal smartness to calling cards, wedding invitations, and birth announcements. Socially correct, too, in fact the accepted social graces demand it . . . for there is no substitute which can convey the character, the charm, the quiet elegance of the genuine.

For all those social forms demanding the service of a skilled engraver, we are happy to serve you.

EVER BUILT!

BESIDES keeping the temperature consistently correct, this General Electric Refrigerator has many unique features. This apartment model has an all-steel cabinet that cannot warp and that uses less current. It has all its mechanicals safely enclosed in an hermetically sealed steel casing. It is unusually quiet, entirely automatic and worryproof.
