AS RESCUE WORK REACHED HEIGHT IN CLEVELAND CLINIC BLAST

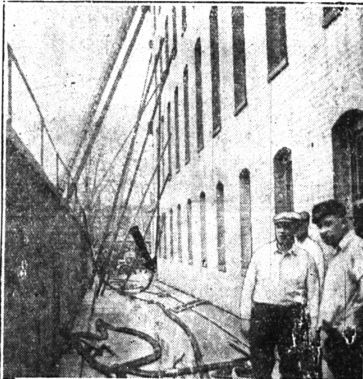

View of the Cleveland Clinic hospital, Cleveland, snapped at the height of the rescue work following an acid explosion and fire that took 120 lives and injured more than 100. Many of the injured were dragged to the roof of the building where doctors and nurses worked over them as the photo shows.

TRAGIC FIGURE IN CLINIC BLAST

Dr. George W. Crile, one of the founders of the Cleveland Clinic hospital, Cleveland, and one of the nation's foremost surgeons, snapped near the hospital as he aided in rescue work following an acid explosion that snuffed out the lives of 120 patients and attendants and injured more than 100 others. The doctor was operating in another building of the clinic when the blast occurred.

WHERE TRAGIC BLAST OCCURRED

Arrow in top photo indicates the basement room in the Cleveland Clinic, Cleveland, where the acid explosion that took 120 lives and injured more than 100 others, occurred. Fire followed the blast and poisonous acid fumes accounted for the deaths of many of the patients and attendants trapped. Below is a rescue scene just outside the clinic.

CLINIC INTERIOR AFTER EXPLOSION

Scene from the interior of the Cleveland Clinic showing the wreckage caused by the acid explosion and fire that took an immense toll in dead and injured. Photo shows a hallway on one of the upper floors above the section where the blast occurred.

AS SON OF MAN O' WAR TOOK DERBY LAURELS

The finish of the 55th running of the Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs, with Clyde Van Dusen, son of the great Man o' War, splashing his way through the mud to a victory, with Jockey Linus McAtee up. Nashapur is shown finishing second, two lengths behind the winner, and Pancho, third. The race was run during a downpour, making good photographs virtually impossible.

CROWD BRAVES RAIN FOR 55TH ANNUAL TURF CLASSIC

A view of the grandstand and some of the overflow crowd that jammed the track at Churchill Downs, Louisville, for the 55th running of the Kentucky Derby. This photo was snapped between heavy showers that converted the track into a sea of mud and water, and drove the spectators back under cover of the stables. The crowd was estimated at 80,000.

Twice Derby Winner

Linus "Pony" McAtee, riding Clyde Van Dusen to the finish line a winner in the 55th running of the Kentucky Derby, has ridden one other victor in the famous racing classic. McAtee rode Whiskery to conquest in the Derby of two years ago.
