

ASSISTANT IS ASKED FOR LIBRARY HERE

Growing Circulation Makes Additional Help Necessary, Board Says

CANDIDATES ARE SEEN

Applicants for the position of assistant in the Baldwin Public Library are being considered today by members of the board. It is expected that the newly created post will be filled within a week.

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—
Manager James W. Parry: "The village has spent about $25 for equipment with which to repair its wells. This will always be in readiness for instant use."

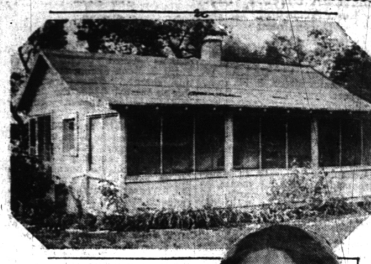

school branch libraries has made an assistant necessary, they believe.

LIBRARY NOTES

By NANCY B. THOMAS
Two interesting books by women writers have been placed on the shelves of the Baldwin Public Library this week. One is "Ten to One in Sweden" by Padry Sylvanus, an account of a young "English Mee" who became a member of a well-to-do Swedish family so that the family of 10 could learn her language. Her life is given in detail and in the life we lead.

GIRL "ROBINSON CRUSOE" ON SMALL ISLAND IN MINNESOTA GAINS FAME AS WRITER

A YOUNG woman who secluded herself from mankind, living on a lonely island in Minnesota, with only a dog for a companion; her only contact with the outside world on occasions above trial for supplies; her books, talking machine, a few magazines and a number of X-rayed art prints her only entertainment—that is Elise Rushfeldt, promising young writer of pioneer tales of the north-west.

Above is the cottage where Elise Rushfeldt, promising young writer, lives alone on a small island in West-Cornoramus lake, Minnesota; at right is Miss Rushfeldt.

She commanded literary attention when her short story, "A Coffin for Anita," which she describes as a tale of "sordid farm life"—was printed by a small magazine at the University of Montana.

Immediately, she was acclaimed by the literary world. One publishing house obtained the story for "The Henry Memorial Award Prize Stories"; and a full length novel, concerning the people and life around Fargo, N. D., and Moorhead, Minn., where she has spent most her life, is to be published soon.

PLISE RUSHFELDT was born of Norwegian parents, pioneer settlers in the North Dakota-Minnesota section.

Today, she is a slight, rather demure woman, dark-eyed, her face and hands tanned by much exposure to Minnesota sun, and opposed to having photographs made of herself.

She taught school for a number of years at Washington State College and at a teachers' college in Minnesota, after attending the Moorhead (Minn.) Teachers' College. She is a graduate of the University of Minnesota, has taken post-graduate work at Columbia University, and spent a number of months abroad.

It was, while abroad that she decided to make writing her life work.

To reach her island home near Fargo, N. D., one must make a tedious automobile journey over a muddy, winding road that leads to West Cornoramus Lake, south of Lake Park, Minn., and then cross the island in a leaky boat.

Her island—she bought it three years ago and has lived there, with the exception of winters, ever since—a spot of beauty, it is rocky, yet, but ferns and flowers and plants are abundant in season. And there are two cottages on it, one for herself and one where her parents stay when they visit her.

Her cottage is little different from any other summer cottage, with one exception—her workshop. It seems ideal for work, with a few bizarre Japanese prints about the walls, a typewriter, in all, she is, rather an untidy place, but ideal for work.

"Of course, I have been writing a long time," she says. "It takes steady plugging for success, and I want to be successful. I've had my share of rejection slips, and probably will get more. You see, I've only had ten stories published, although I have sold nine others that are to be published soon."

"Here I can write undisturbed. I can think here. And I like it. I know the people of this country and it is of them I am writing. And, strange to say, I don't get lonely living alone—I am too busy."

Miss Elise Rushfeldt.

FACE-TO-FACE REALISM

Radio Music That Exalts and Thrills
For the lovers of music who have longed for that "something" that has been missing from your favorite programs... we have this promise:
In Sparton's FACE-TO-FACE REALISM you FIND that "Something." You will find the stirring but restrained power that thrills and uplifts. You will find gloriously satisfying fullness, that seems to flood the room even when the music sinks to a whisper. You will find every exquisite shade of light and shadow that the master puts into his music. You will seem to be conscious of his living, captivating presence and personality. For these are the distinctive things of which Face-To-Face Realism is composed.

This is an invitation for you, yourself, to be the judge of this enchanting, new quality in radio reception... You may hear one of the new Sparton sets here, and have an instrument placed in your home without obligation. Test it critically and thoroughly.

much about Swedish hospitality, home life, education and food.

The older book, "Under Five Sultans" is written by Mary Mills Patrick. It is more serious and deals with a longer period of time.

Dr. Patrick went to Constantinople as a girl of 21 and spent the greater part of her time there for the next 50 years. She was identified with the Constantinople College most of her life. She follows the history of Turkey in relating the story of her life and in so doing makes vivid events which are Her descriptions of the harem, the women, their education or lack of it, the modes of travel, are all interesting reading. She has a humorous way of presenting her material and yet she has an understanding sympathy for the people she lived among so many years.

This month's Ladies Home Journal has an article about Detroit written by a Detroit woman. It is beautifully illustrated in color and occupies two full pages in the front part of the issue.
