

SUN-TAN FADING IN FALL HOSIERY

Instead of the rosate tanning so popular for summer wear, hose for fall feature shades of tan and beige having a slightly yellow cast in keeping with autumn browns. Neutral tones also make their appearance for wear with blacks and grays and winter blues. Naturally the colors tend down the scale of intensity instead of upward. There is little change in styling except in sports hose, where fancy weaves and drop stitch patterns are developed in heavier weights for fall.

WALKING STICKS POPULAR

In step with the heightened interest in evening clothes for fall, there is an increasing demand for walking sticks. The favorite model is the straight stick of natural or black ebony, with either gold, silver or ivory tip and mounting. One formal stick in natural ebony is very slender with a perfectly straight, right-angle handle tipped with silver.

Day sticks of malacca with turned handles are popular for general wear. For sports there is an exquisite malacca cane having a straight top ornamented with genuine lizard skin and rosewood.

FALL SUITS TO FIT FORM

NEW THINGS IN STERLING SILVER

Although at first the regal implication of sterling service plates and goblets may hold us off at first, length of acquaintance is enough to question. We will learn that both may be had at moderate prices which are even less than that of many china plates and fine crystal goblets. This hard to believe, but it's true.

And furthermore—this luxurious service is scheduled to become the height of formality for fall. (Just fancy the satisfaction of ordering with such equipment on hand!)

One design which seems particularly pleasing is moulded along the flange lines of the colonial period. Dignified and sober, yet gracefully turned, these pieces press the spirit of the sturdy pioneers, depending on exquisite simplicity rather than ornamentation for their effect.

Quoting ourselves as to economic wisdom of such a selection, it occurs to us that here is a permanent investment—not only in terms of material, but in that intangible though not less valuable sense we know as prestige. Sterling place plates and goblets need not be devoted entirely to use as foundation plates, but may be returned again for the most courteous and in addition, used for many other purposes.

which is inclined to round out in front.

Men will wear suspenders. There is a strong tendency to keep away from belted trousers which in a measure destroy the straight line. The waistcoat for the single-breasted coat is smarter when made double-breasted, while for the double-breasted coat a single-breasted vest is shown.

In sports the tendency has been for simpler styling—easy models with patch pockets and coats which can be worn with either knickerbockers or long trousers. This double-purpose appeals strongly to the man who goes off for the weekend, and also to the college man. The pleated jacket of the sports suit illustrated at the top is an excellent example in point.

Fabrics for these practical suits include serge and English cloth in all the usual patterns for menswear—design and color being a matter of individual choice. For sports, the Shetland cloth is excellent; likewise cashmere vicuña cloth for jackets to be worn with striped flannel trousers.

When space does not permit showing a model for every purpose one must, of course, choose the types most necessary for the greatest number. And so I have shown above three suits which are essential to every masculine wardrobe. They are from the new fall collection of Jas. W. Bell & Son Company, exclusive tailors, and represent the outstanding style features of the season in the department to which each belongs.

To the left is the sporty, center, the three-buttoned business suit; right, the double-breasted suit approved by fashion for fall.

VELVET PAJAMAS APPEAR FOR FALL

More elaborate than ever are the house gowns and pajamas which now turn to velvet as a fabric worthy to express their new importance. Printed velvets in gay plaids combine with crepe and satin in the pajama ensembles, while broad-cloth velvet plays an important part in the styling of draped negligees, many of which show ostrich or marabou trimming.

One new fall negligee combines black transparent velvet with brocade metal cloth, employing the velvet for the skirt section which dips long in back, and the metal cloth in the form of a jacket with the ends floating down the center back.

In many instances the princess silhouette is suggested, the negligence of transparent velvet.
