

BOYS' GAMES ROOM POPULAR

Always Crowded, Says Mr. Yapple, Community House Sec'y

One of the most popular places in the new Community House, according to George S. Yapple, executive secretary, is the boys' games room, largely equipped by Judson Broadway.

During the first three weeks, Mr. Yapple said, the room has been constantly the center of attraction

For many small boys and young men, clamoring to play the many interesting games there. A ping-pong table, a pool table, and several basenball and checkers games are part of the permanent equipment there, and Mr. Yapple has ordered a cue-rugue table. Cue-rugue, he explained, is a game played on a table with a layout similar to that in croquet, except that the player sends the ball with a cue between rubber-tipped pegs instead of through arches. Indoor horse shoes and dart-throwing are also played there.

A Wealth of Beauty Is Stored In Cranbrook Museum of Art

Students and faculty of Cranbrook School and residents of Bloomfield Hills and Birmingham have the rare privilege of living in the neighborhood of a fine collection of art objects, gathered by George G. Booth from all over the world, and beautifully placed in the museum of the Cranbrook Academy of Art, Commissemors of art travel hundreds of miles to look upon the treasures there, which, to the people of this district, are close at hand.

The old and the new, the exotic and the beautiful are alike represented in this museum, and in the objects in it, and of so wide a range in period and style, that a visit to the museum will consume many hours. If one is to observe with thoroughness, although the museum is as yet not large.

A marble relief plaque depicting a cavally on the march is the oldest piece in the collection. It is an example of Assyrian art, wrought in the Seventh century, B. C., with angular and somewhat shortened figures. Details of the dress of the men and the equipment of the horses are carefully worked out. The plaque was excavated at Nineveh, and is part of the series of reliefs in the British museum, describing the siege, assault, and capture of the city of Lachish, by Sennacherib, King of Assyria, 705-681 B. C.

Among the newest pieces is the black Belgian marble cat, by Edward M. Sandoz, French contemporary who belongs to the modernistic school. Very effective in its correct setting, this cat was purchased by Mr. Booth last year in Paris. A cream glaze porcelain "Diana and Stag," by David Evans, now engaged in making a football frieze for the new Cranbrook Stadium, an exhibit of modern French pottery, and Miss Katherine McEwen's two sketches for the frescoes in Christ Church, are also fine examples of contemporary art.

Returning to the older pieces, the visitor to the museum will see a marble cinerarium, representing the rape of Proserpine, an original Greek high relief, in remarkably perfect condition, belonging to the Third century, B. C. The number of old columns, bases, and capitals in the Corinthian, the Ionic, and the Gothic style may be found in the court.

The boys of Cranbrook school, according to Henry P. Macomber, secretary of the Academy, take special delight in the old chests of carved walnut or iron. One iron coffer, made in Nuremberg in 1600 is interesting because of its elaborate lock. Then separate locks fastening around three sides of the lid, are turned simultaneously by one key, which operates in a keyhole cleverly hidden among the intricate detail engraving over the chest. There was, in addition, a false keyhole on the front of the chest. When the coffer was acquired, there was no key to unlock it, but one of the Cranbrook ironworkers made one to fit. Within the coffer is a compartment, also elaborately engraved to hide another keyhole.

Cabinets and Chests in Group A beautifully carved walnut wardrobe, made in Venice in the Seventeenth century, with hand-crafted, and decorated hinges, is a part of the furniture exhibit. Another old piece of furniture is a chest of drawers, made in Bohemia in the Eighteenth century. A fifteenth century carved walnut Gothic chest, with fenestration, is now in the museum, having exhibited in the Chateau de Blois in May, 1926. A contemporary piece of great value is a lady's desk of rosewood with ivory inlay, designed by Joubert and Petit, and executed by Dim, of Paris. This was first shown in the Paris exposition of 1924. A Dutch linen press, containing beauty and utility, dates from 1700.

Exhibits of silver, wrought in the Cranbrook Academy, and of beautiful glass, of which some were bound and illuminated in the Cranbrook bindery, are shown to visitors through the museum. The great interest in art is the Cranbrook Press, founded in Detroit in 1900, which has issued fine editions, among them the "First Published Life of Lincoln," written in 1940 by John G. Lock, a volume, and bound in pig skin, hand tool with a cover design of acorns and leaves. "The Revelation of St. John the Divine," first printed in 1925, was reprinted by the Cranbrook press in its Cranbrook binding in 1901. Two books recently bound at the press are "Child Christopher," by William Morris, and "Samson Agonistes," by John Milton.

Naturally, it is impossible to do justice to the wealth of art treasures to be found all over Cranbrook school and in Christ Church, as well as those in the museum. The museum is open to the public between 3:30 a. m. and 5 p. m. Monday to Friday, and on Saturday throughout the morning. Mr. Macomber will conduct parties through the rooms on appointment.

Application of new and scientific principles to the art of cooking have brought about remarkable changes in the average kitchen stove in the past few years, according to E. W. Brecker, district agent of the Detroit Edison Co. A new stove, called the Electroche, which is heated by electricity, is being used in the kitchen of the Cranbrook school. The Electroche is as clean as sunlight," he said. "All of the soot and smoke are removed in the power house, instead of being allowed to deposit and accumulate on kitchen walls and curtains. And once a cooking utensil is cleaned it remains brightly polished during months of use with an electric stove."

"The Electroche itself can be kept clean in all its parts as easily as a china dish, a point which has proven to be a continual delight to women. This feature assures an always immaculate stove, with very little labor to keep it so."

"Foods cooked in an electric oven retain most of the nourishing juices with their natural flavors that are ordinarily lost in the escaping steam and vapor in an ordinary oven. Electroche's oven is semi-sealed and has no vent—meats cook in their own juices. There is little shrinkage and practically no weight loss—which, of course, adds to economy."

INVENTIONS NEEDED

Most windows rattle. There is room for improvement in the style of a window so that it may be moved or opened, yet when closed will close tightly. Cheapness must be considered to insure mass production.

The modern kitchen, with its varieties of wood, beckons us to invent a mind to supply helpful devices for the housewife. An egg-beater; simply and easily to keep clean, and capable of being used for other similar purposes, should insure freedom on the yoke of its inventor for years to come.

No Rest for the Wicked—Sh— "The world is full of rascals this morning, the milkman gave me a courtesy half-dollar for my milk."

He—"Where is it, my dear?" "Oh, I've already got rid of it—luckily the butcher took it."

Easing The Sorrow of The Stricken

If there is any one time when the family needs considerate attention and requires the service of those who can take from their shoulders all petty details and worries, it is when death invades the home.

Those who call upon us can rely upon all the service, all the care, and all the consideration which we could give to our own.
