HOWARTH TALKS ON TAX PROBLEM

Advocates "Single Tax" In Discussion Before Lions Club

Taxation, the universal problem, was the subject of a talk yesterday given by Mr. J. B. Howarth, Birmingham real estate and insurance agent, at the regular luncheon meeting of the Lions Club in the Community House.

As a solution to the present unbalanced economics in the country, Mr. Howarth suggested the adoption of the "single tax." This tax system, originated by Henry George, noted economist, would regulate wealth principally by possession of land for which alone would be taxed, he said.

"No present system of taxation," Mr. Howarth said, "meets with unanimous approval. We know that there are two primary factors in the production of wealth and that wealth consists of natural objects or those changed through man's efforts for his own support. Capital is wealth and is used to produce more wealth. All wealth is produced from the land and labor is the second important factor.

"The communal wants are created by the growth of the community and with the growth comes the increased value of land. Therefore," he said, "we see the advantage of the single tax—a tax upon land alone."

Opera Roles Make Heavy Drain On Physical Stamina, Say Stars

Songsters Of Metropolitan Hail Demise Of Craze For Boyish Form

By Mable Love

SINGING in the famous Metropolitan Opera, far from being solely a matter of talent, training the vocal cords, and some skill in acting, imposes a physical strain demanding the singer's closest attention to the effort to maintain the same degree of physical perfection as is the goal of the athlete. To this effect both Mary Lewis and Madame Mario give the weight of their indisputable testimony.

"To become a success in the operatic field," says Mary Lewis, considered by many to be the world's most beautiful opera star, "a foremost consideration must be the necessary stamina to carry one through. Singing is largely physical. It really exercises the entire body, and the voice very quickly betrays the lack of physical endurance."

Now living in Hollywood where she is making her motion picture debut, the singer tells of seeing a young movie actress pause suddenly in front of the camera, stare wildly about her, and fall in a dead faint. Investigation revealed she was another victim of the 18-day diet fad. "Three times I saw the same scene enacted in Hollywood," Miss Lewis says. "I can't imagine what makes a girl do such a silly thing. It would be impossible for a singer, anyway, for if one is not in perfect health it is impossible to sing well."

Aside from the singing itself, Madame Mario points out that many roles call into play the muscles of the body. "In Hansel and Gretel" she says, "I jump and kick and skip about through the whole performance." To keep herself in the proper physical trim, Madame Mario is careful to obtain sufficient exercise off the stage as well as on it. She jumps rope and is an ardent lover of horseback riding. She sleeps nine or ten hours out of the twenty-four and eats plenty of nourishing foods, avoiding all fads.

Possessing a well-developed sweet tooth, she recalls an instance when, feeling very tired, she was seized with an overwhelming desire for an ice cream soda, which she speedily satisfied. When she happened to mention this to her physician, he explained that she was simply meeting nature's demands. "He told me," she says, "that the system requires a certain amount of energy which is supplied by carbohydrates, and the ice cream soda, containing this in the form of sugar and chocolate, supplied me with the very thing I needed. As I am very fond of sweets, this was pleasant news."

Like Mary Lewis, Madame Mario has nothing good to say for the recent boyish figure craze. "I am glad the reducing fad has been exploded," she declares. "Why, it's the silliest thing I ever heard of. The idea of growing girls depriving themselves of proper nourishment to gratify a foolish whim for a scrawny figure is absurd. Surely there is no beauty in such lines."

Mary Lewis, considered by many the world's most beautiful opera star. (Left) Madame Queena Mario, an advocate of sane living and a proof of its beneficial effect upon professional success and personal charm.
