Laurence Shaffner, Mrs. Y. C. Smith, and Mrs. Harrison J. Stringham. These women, all interested in adolescent psychology, decided last May that a style show for prospective college students would be an excellent means of aiding in the students' self-adjustment to the college environment through proper dress.

Last year's graduates of the Baldwin High school, who plan to matriculate at some college next month are as follows: Claudine Craig and Doris Hoffman, Olivet college; Katherine Hunt, Gulf Park college; Virginia Thomas, Queens' University; Mary Hutchinson, Sweetbriar College; Betty Kidder, University of Wisconsin; Betty Brede, Hollins college; Patricia Sterling, Kalamazoo college; Venita Cook, Carleton College; Jane and Lulu Poppleton and Frances Murray, Penn hall; Vadne Scott, Oberlin college; and Rosaleen Stewart, Ohio Weslyan university.

The selection of the clothes to be shown comprises the minimum wardrobe of sensible and suitable apparel for campus wear, according to members of the committee, who culled their information from lists suggested by college deans, Parents' Magazine, Good-housekeeping, Ladies' Home Journal, Vogue, Marshall Field and Co., and other authorities.

Explaining their purpose in giving the show, members of the executive committee made the following statement: "The matter of proper clothes for the various activities of college life may seem frivolous, but the newer psychology of adolescence endorses this effort to help college girls secure the right wardrobe; for nothing gives a girl the poise and confidence that the knowledge that she is suitably and becomingly dressed for the occasion.

"The cost of such a wardrobe need not be great, for many garments in excellent taste can be selected from the moderate priced styles."
