ENGLISH AUTHOR LEAVES FOR HOME

Mrs. Henry Dudney, noted English author of more than two score books, among which probably are the best-known are "Spindle and Plough," "Folly's Corner," and "Men of Marlowe's," left Birmingham last week for her home at Castle Prectincta House, Lewes, Sussex, Eng. Mrs. Dudney, who was visiting the United States for the first time, spent the greater part of her trip with her daughter, Mrs. J. Christopher Fulleylove, of Willis street.

Mrs. Dudney, in speaking of the States, said that the New York skyscrapers are the most striking thing about America. The vastness of this country and its inhabitants' disregard for long trips puzzled Mrs. Dudney. "We think of 300 miles as going from one end of the country to the other," she said.

F. T. Cooper, noted American critic in his book "Some English Story Tellers," ranks Mrs. Dudney among such immortals as Joseph Conrad, Rudyard Kipling, Arnold Bennett, Anthony Hope, and May Sinclair. If she is comparatively little known in Birmingham, it is because the majority of her books were published in England, although she has written numerous stories for Harpers, Smart Set and other American magazines.

As a writer, Mrs. Dudney excels in her skill in presenting trite details and for her insight into feminine nature. Her favorite plots deal with the conflict which goes on in the heart of a certain type of woman between two opposing instincts; that of independence, freedom and physical comfort and that of sex, sacrifice and self-surrender.

Mrs. Dudney's favorite among her own novels is "Guinea Alley." Another very interesting one, "Brighton Beach," may be obtained at the Birmingham library.

accident, Mrs. Zahm's car, driven by J. S. Mayo, of the same address, Pontiac, stopped for the red signal light at Brown street, when a car driven by Lester Follman, 13,971 Lumpkin street, Pontiac, struck it in the rear.

Mrs. Zahm was treated by Dr. C. F. Lawler for bruises and an injured back.
