BIRMINGHAM AS SEEN BY—

R. J. CORVELLA

President of the Corvella Nursery.

How long have you been in this type of business?

In landscape work since 1902 and in Nursery business since 1905, when I started this nursery.

What led you to choose Birmingham as your location?

When I had accumulated enough money to by some land, a search was made in the Detroit area for soil that was suitable for this type of business. Quite a number of tracts were recommended but none was suitable. I still remembered that in 1891 at a meeting of Michigan State Horticultural Society when the subject of "Municipal Improvement" was under discussion, Mr. W. W. Tracy was then Superintendent of the D. M. Ferry Seed Farm said—"The village of Birmingham has such an organization. Miss Baldwin, a school teacher, is the head of it. They are endeavoring to have every one keep their grounds in fine condition." I thought that Birmingham would be a congenial locality.

What growth do you expect of Birmingham in the next five years?

About the same as in the past five years. The greatest growth probably will be in the restricted subdivisions.

What do you consider Birmingham's greatest need?

A Zoning Ordinance, so that prospective home builders will feel as safe in erecting desirable homes in the residential part of Birmingham as are now rising in the restricted subdivisions surrounding the village. Without

Fire Near School Is Extinguished

Birmingham firemen Thursday morning extinguished a fire on the roof of the Barnum School addition at Frank and Purdy streets. The fire originated in a barrel of oil. The children were not in danger because the flames were confined to an area too distant from them and their classes were continued without interruption.

George Lee, a workman, who was tarring the roof of the $350,000 school addition, was burned slightly about the hands trying to extinguish the blaze. The oil was being used in a bucket with which to heat the tar.

In going to places yet unexplored by man and afterwards listening to the stories told by Averill, Vliet, Bob Moore and Frank Schlaack. These stories seem to grow like the proverbial Bay Tree.

Our Navy Department has strict ideas concerning the uses that can be made of a vessel that once felt the tread of High Executive feet. There must be nothing commercial about this transaction, nothing, that is, except for the hundred thousand smackers from the purchaser. The buyer cannot
