

Mrs. Molla Propp

"Be careful"

said MRS. MOLLA PROPP, "to keep the wheelbase adjusted just right."

A MAN does come in handy once in awhile, my dear. I would have been desperate if I had been alone when something happened to the car late the other night when we were returning from that long drive. It just up and stopped like that, my dear—and there we were on a dark night in a strange place. Embarrassing, no end!

But Henry seemed to know just what to do. He looked at the carburetor, but no, that seemed all right. Then he screwed up the spark plug just a wee bit, but 'twasn't that apparently, then he took the thermostat off and looked at it, but it didn't help a bit; then he took a file and touched up the vacuum in the exhaust. It was all no use, my dear. Finally he said, "Ah, I have it!" And he took our emergency can of gasoline and poured it into the tank and right away the car stopped out as if nothing had happened. Henry is so smart. He knows almost everything about machinery.

Of course, that didn't help us find the right road for we'd forgotten to look at the numbers when we stepped by and here we were on a country road.

Finally we could see a sign dimly to one side. Thank goodness, said Henry, and he got out and took a flashlight out of his pocket to look at the sign. But the light didn't work. So he waded through the mud over to the sign and carefully lit a match.

"What does it say?" I asked. "It says, 'buy a Donnerwetter piano' . . . bother!" Henry said or words to that effect!

New One Must Be Wrong . . . He is so bigoted; the sap is just a narrow-minded chap! I argue with him but in vain, he says that I am wrong again. I holler till my throat is hoarse, but he will never change his course. A huge he will always be. Because he says the same of me. —Brooklyn Eagle.
