Some Antique Chairs Are American

By HILDA HUNT
The chairs sketched above are all early American. They are authentic because the drawings were made by courtesy of the Metropolitan museum. Moreover, they are the types most frequently found in American homes today.

The old-fashioned rocking chair, which is now almost obsolete, and which the younger generation reaching man and womanhood loathe, is an American invention. It came in with the banister-back, the slat-back and the Windsor chairs. At the top of the sketch are three examples of these chairs, which doubtless you will remember as being at one time in your family, though perhaps now in the hands of some antique dealer.

The first shows the slat-back chair, usually of maple or ash, which made its appearance about 1725 to 1750. Next to it is the banister-back of the same period. The third chair is the fiddle-back design, which appeared earlier, 1710 to 1720. Rockers were added to these designs about 1750.

Foreign Designs Reflected
Of course often in these early American pieces we find the reflection of foreign designs. Yet there are many that do not. Probably the most prominent furniture designer of the early nineteenth century was Duncan Phyfe, of New York. You can usually find the Phyfe influence in the inward curved legs and the backward curved back. Phyfe used mahogany largely. At the lower left of the sketch is a chair with curved slat back, showing the Duncan Phyfe influence, and dating back to 1830. Another chair of Phyfe influence is a very popular design, with lyre back, is sketched at the right center.

Sheraton also influenced the early American furniture to considerable extent, and at the left center we have typically Sheraton influence in the rectangular chair with straight front legs of the upholstered chair. At the upper right is a typically early American Windsor chair with square top and arms, not the type of Windsor most frequently found today, but popular with our early American ancestors. Just below it is a typical slat-back Shaker chair.

The breakfast is served for two, the luncheon for one, and the dinner menu is planned for four persons, the host and hostess and two guests.

Today's Recipes
Tomato Tulip—Scopery cut out of four small-sized, firm tomatoes and fill with caviar. Rub one-quarter pound cream cheese in a paste, color half of it with green vegetable coloring and make alternate green and white leaves around top of each tomato by filling a teaspoon level with cheese and then pushing it gently off the spoon with your thumb. Serve on lettuce leaves with salad dressing.

Stuffed Flank Steak—Two pounds flank steak, one tablespoon flour, one teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon pepper, one-half cup sausage meat, one-half cup celery, cut fine, three cups stale bread soaked in cold water, one teaspoon sage, two tablespoons melted butter, one egg, beaten; one can vegetable soup. Rub surface of steak with flour and seasonings. Brown sausage meat and onion in pan, then add bread (squeezed dry), sage and egg. Mix well.

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—

Gas Frank, local restaurant proprietor: "One of the greatest Greek characters was old Diogenes. He used to hang out in a rain barrel. One time Hannibal, returning from a foreign victory, stopped at the rain barrel and, pleased with a man eating in Diogenes had done or said for him, offered him anything he wished for as a reward. 'Just move your horse over a bit,' replied Diogenes, 'so I can enjoy the beautiful sunshine.' Diogenes was a great chap."
