AUXILIARY AND LEGION MEET

Joint Assembly of Groups Will Be Held At Party Wednesday

The joint meeting of the American Legion and the American Legion Auxiliary will take place this evening at a party given by the former organization at Bloomfield Township park next Wednesday evening. A steak dinner will be followed by an evening of cards and games. There will be a discussion of the department convention to be held in Sault Ste. Marie, July 4, 5, and 6. All former service men and their wives are invited by Legion officials to attend.

At the meeting last night of the American Legion, committees were appointed to work with the Auxiliary on the Peggy Lee Memorial day for the benefit of the Otter Lake Billet. An endeavor will be made to sell twice as many poppies this year as were sold last year, according to Stanley Stanley, Commander of the Post.

Mr. Stanley gave a report, in which he spoke of the Gold Star mothers, who will be given free trips to Washington or Europe next year. He called attention to two new acts recently passed by Congress, the first making it an offense to desecrate the flag, punishable by a fine of $100; the second postponing the conscription claim date to Jan. 3, 1936.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Bailey and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph MacGregor, who spent Sunday visiting the Otter Lake Billet, gave reports of their observations there.

U. OF M. JUNIOR GIRLS CONTINUE TRADITIONAL SUCCESS ON STAGE

By SALLY KNOX

Last week, Michigan students, returning alumni, and Ann Arbor residents had the pleasure of witnessing the twenty-sixth annual Junior Girls' Play, "State Street," presented this year for the first time in Lydia Mendelssohn Theater in the Women's League building. A collegiate atmosphere around which the play was built by its author, Marian Leasing, and in some cases, the lyrics and melodious songs, all composed by feminine members of the junior class, and the usual bevy of pretty girls in the choruses, combined to make this play a hit, as previous ones during the past few years have been.

The fact that the junior class before the curtain rises. For the could play their parts as convincingly as those "male" wonders of from Eight Till Eight, and the Love of Pete, and "Forward March"; that the singing voices of the male and female leads were untrained, and, in some cases, tuneless; that there were not the usual number of intricate dance steps and that the story, in no way hindered the success of the performances.

Gay Spirit Persuades

Excellent entertainment was provided the onlooker in spite of these faults. The gay spirit with which the production was imbued, the light-hearted jibes at collegiate institutions, the really fine acting of some of the leading characters, and, as said before, the array of feminine beauty, make any Michigan enthusiast feel that he is well rewarded.

Small danger there is that the Junior Girls play will go the way of the Michigan Opera, which has been declining in value and interest; while the Junior Girls play has been building up for itself an ever increasing crowd of paying supporters.

The Junior Girls' play, like most great things, had an unpretentious beginning, back in the early years of this century, when the junior girls one year decided to put on a stunt for the senior girls. The next year and the years following, the seniors in turn were honored with "stunts," until the event became a tradition.

These early performances made no claim to magnificence, and were performed in Harbour Gymnasium for one night only, and for the senior girls only.

Year by year, the affair increased in importance, and year by year, more effort was expended in attempts to make it the "best yet," until in the "twens" of this century it assumed the proportions of an opera. For a long period of time, it was directed by Prof. John L. Brumm, of the Journalism department, who, we suspect, also had a hand
