WOMEN HOLD OBSERVANCE OF PEACE DAY

Cranbrook Pavilion Scene of Pageant And Addresses

Commemorating the first peace conference held at the Hague May 18, 1899, two hundred women members of the Women's Council for Education in International Relations, an organization composed of representatives of 10 Detroit clubs, met in the Cranbrook pavilion Sunday afternoon to participate in a program of pageant and addresses.

Judge Vincent M. Brennan, of Detroit spoke on "The Internationalism of the Past," and brought out the fact that women have the opportunity to avert war because of their appeal to the soul of mankind and the conscience of public opinion. Rabbi Leo Frank, of Detroit, speaking on "The Internationalism of the Present," pointed out the fact that a series of conferences which may seem futile in themselves will lead to the conference habit, which will in turn avert war.

Dr. Samuel S. Marquis, rector of Christ Church, spoke on "The Internationalism of the Future." Socially sub-normal men holding high public office, he said, will continue to be the greatest menace to peace because they fail to see that the peace of the world depends on equal treatment for all citizens of the world.

Mrs. Harold T. Miller was director of the program, and spoke briefly, suggesting that the present age might go down in history as one in which social development led to permanent peace. Miss Blanche Rinehart introduced 60 women costumed in the gay garb of most of the nations of the world, obtaining premises of peace from each.

Here, again, performance alone will count.

An Open Jump open to all riders, adults as well as children, will be the next event. Eight fences four feet high must be surmounted in a satisfactory manner to win the trophy in this number. Parents and children will ride in pairs at walk, trot, and canter, in the Parent and Child class. Manners, way of going and similarity of horses will count.

The last two events are also open to adults as well as children. The Green Hunter class will be open to horses six years old and under. Horses will be shown over eight fences, three feet, six inches high. Conformation will count 60 per cent and performance, 40 per cent. The final class will be Hunter Hack, to be shown at walk, trot, and canter. Here conformation will count 50 per cent and manners and way of going, 50 per cent.
