TWO COMEDIES AND MELODRAMA ARE GIVEN BY VILLAGE PLAYERS

By A Member of the Village Players

Friday, Nov. 21 marked the second performance of the Village Players' season. The program opened with the comedy, "The Last of the Mohicans," by Robert Hughes, John Saunders, the shell-shocked son of a good family, was a splendid liar, and appealed to the unsophisticated heart of Winifred Ashton, played by Barbara Wrenken. Harold Shuart, as the Irish clubman, did a nice bit of work. The play was directed by Willie O. Forsyth, assisted by Mary Alice Grindell.

The outstanding feature of the evening was "Thread of Scarlet," a thrilling melodrama by E. Essen Olson, assisted by Jack Edgerly. The setting, the taproom of an English inn; and the effects of rain, hail, and lightning put the audience into a receptive mood for the thrills which followed.

"The Noble Lord," by Percival Wilde, was directed by Elizabeth Penney and Beulah Little. Betty Shaffer as the dejected young woman, sets her cap for Lord Brookfield, (played by Donald Stanton), Fred Dickinson, Stan Stauch, the genial landlady, and Ward Crankshaw, as a traveler, completed the cast. Altogether, it was a well-rounded and smooth performance.
