Progress of Aviation Shown In Lecture And Motion Pictures at Cranbrook

Students and friends of Cranbrook School were present at a lecture on the history of aviation given by W. C. E. Rortman in the school auditorium last Monday evening. The lecture, which was given to Cranbrook through the kindness of Mr. Warren Booth, was accompanied by a complete display of model airplanes representing the various important steps in historical development of flying as well as the chief types of flying aircraft.

Starting with the interesting though unsuccessful efforts of Leonardo da Vinci in 1490, Mr. Rortman showed models and pictures of the various types of heavier and lighter-than-air craft which have marked progress to the present time. Not the least interesting feature of the lecture was the exhibition of several short moving picture reels showing some of the earliest flights on record. Knowledge of the fairly recent development of the elimination series of motion picture photography and aviation, it was most interesting to see the picture reels showing some of the earliest flights on record. Knowledge of the fairly recent development of the elimination series of motion picture photography and aviation, it was most interesting to see the picture reels showing some of the earliest flights on record.

Among the earliest flights to be photographed by the moving picture camera, and of which a reel was taken at Cranbrook, was the attempt of Langley's models on the Potomac River. Though the pioneer of aviation did succeed in making his models fly successfully, his full size planes were unable to equal the success, and it was while Langley was making his efforts that the Wright brothers established modern aviation by the first successful flight in a heavier-than-air machine at Kitty Hawk, N. C. on Dec. 17, 1903. Though movies of this sort but which making flight were not shown, pictures taken at later ventures in the same airplane were shown on the screen by Mr. Rortman. The early efforts of Glenn H. Curtiss in his smoky biplane were also shown, as were several of the flights which were carried out in Europe with both heavier and lighter-than-air machines. In conclusion, a reel was shown depicting the travel now made possible across the continent by the Transcontinental Air Transport Co., in connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Advisers To Give Party For Seniors The final party of the Baldwin High School senior Washington Group will be held at the home of Miss Emily Walker, adviser of the group, at Big Beaver road, this afternoon at 5:30. Miss Walker, together with Miss Ruth Hull, the group's secretary, is giving the affair to express their appreciation for the group's fine conduct during the annual Washington excursion. Old clothes are to be worn according to the sponsors of the occasion. Those of the faculty who will also attend the party include Franklin Whitney, W. C. Tooker, and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Viet.

President James King of Olivet College, was at Baldwin High School Monday afternoon, to inspect a group of seniors who are contemplating entering college next year. The high school soft-ball schedule starts this afternoon with the senior team playing the Juniors at 7:30. The freshmen meeting the sophomores. All games will be played on Thursday afternoons in the playground at the rear of the old Hill School.

WRECKED RACKET. Recently a wealthy New York woman arrived from Europe with dozens of trunks filled with the finest clothes and presented her receipted bills to the customs officer, whereupon that official grimly produced a set of photostatic copies of other bills for the same clothes—with widely different totals.

In Paris, many days before, a spy for the United States Customs, after long weeks of studying the bookkeeping methods of one of the large dressmaking firms, had executed a coup which netted her 1,500,000 francs and cost the wealthy New York woman 5,000,000 francs for under-declaration of dutiable goods.

THE ORACLE OF CICERO. In this connection read what America's famous gambler, big to say on that subject. "There's one thing worse than a crooked cop," he quipped, "and that is a crooked man in a big political job. Any man that pretends to be enforcing the law and is really taking dough from somebody who is breaking the law, is enforcing the law and is really taking dough from somebody who is breaking the law." (Theodora) hasn't any use for that kind of fellow. The hood bugs themselves would find any other article necessary in his trade, but he hates them in his heart.

EFFICIENCY. Brother Woodcock, the production fellow, avows the intention of "trying to make Volstead law enforcement more human."

CHANGING MODES. If you can't coax her out from under the sheltering shade of the beach umbrella, this Summer get where she's merely conforming to the latest fashion which calls for pink skin, rose-fetal cheeks, more delicate shades of lipstick and a dainty, feminine coiffure.

HAM AND PEANUTS. Old Dave Warfield lolls back in his palatial home on Central Park West and daydreams in dreams of yesteryear. And like most men on their way down the far side of The Stone, near the shadows, he wags a dolorous head and says: "Life isn't what it used to be."

WARFIELD WHO IS IN THE minor sixties says he'll never return to the stage. "Why should I?" he asks. "I've got my bag of peanuts. I don't want any more."

WARFIELD, AS AN actor, was much overrated. His work embraced much of that mediocrity which, on the authority of Thackeray, always insures success.

CHESTNUT. John Held, Jr., author of "Dog Stories," talked about dogs recently on the radio. He considers the dachshund the most intelligent breed and also the most adaptable to living in a New York apartment because "they fit so well under furniture."

KIDDING MAUVE DECADE. The saddest thing on earth is the spectacle of a modern, youthful, sophisticated razing the "Gai Nineties" and dipping back into that brilliant era whenever he needs the lace for a wisecrack.

POOR FELLOW. My friend, Edmund Hunt says that since the "Keen Kissable" appeared, he finds he has a tobacco habit.

CANNY GENEROSITY. A New York Saboth since called upon those of Scottish descent in the congregation to rise, and then asked them not to be Scotch when the collection plate got around.

Several days later Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald told a gathering of students in Elgin, Scotland, that a woman friend of his, who had passed most of her life working for charities, had assured him that whenever an appeal was made for some great national purpose more contribution came anonymously from Aber-
