W. C. T. U. Plans To Combat Evils of Intemperance

"Educate, agitate, organize against the forces of evil."

"Give support and co-operation to the great task of upholding the eighteenth amendment."

"Teach young people the evils of intemperance."

"Pray for the success of the eighteenth amendment, and for our 'Dry President.'"

These are some of the answers with which members of the W. C. T. U. responded to roll call at a meeting held Wednesday of last week in the parlors of the First Baptist Church here. Each member was asked to give her answer to the question "How Can I Best Carry On the Work of the W. C. T. U.?" when her name was called on the roll.

Co-Operation Urged

Collectively the answers showed that the members feel the importance of rallying around their cause as a group, and as individuals of carrying on the work of the organization in their separate walks of life. In virtually every answer was voiced the necessity of co-operation through attendance and the upholding of the W. C. T. U. program for law enforcement.

Members of the Troy Union who were guests of the Birmingham Union, were also asked to express themselves on the question.

Mrs. Mary L. Kirkpatrick of the Troy Union attributes the evils of intemperance to a "decrease in thinking."

"I feel that I can best carry on the work of the W. C. T. U. by thinking the problem through," Mrs. Kirkpatrick said. "If we analyze the present difficulties regarding prohibition, we find on the whole, that they are due to a decrease in thinking rather than an increase in drinking."

Warns Against Failure

Mrs. Nettie McKinney of the Birmingham Union offered a constructive solution.

"I can best carry on the work by helping in every way I can to do those things the organization stands for," said Mrs. McKinney. "Failure on my part means to weaken the whole structure. Success can only be attained when all respond to the word 'Go.' Each one must help to educate, agitate and organize against the forces of evil, remembering our slogan, 'For law observance and enforcement, not repeal.'"

Mrs. J. C. Matthews of the Birmingham Union expressed faith in the power of the printed word.

"Facts outweigh false propaganda," Mrs. Matthews explained. "I can keep myself informed concerning literature which presents the truth about prohibition, and can help to sow the community knee-deep in such literature. Even follow it with the prayer that the truth may prevail."

Would Educate Youth

Mrs. Edith M. Hebbie had in mind the younger generation when she offered as her solution, "Teach our young people that alcohol is a narcotic drug, and educate them that they may know the evils of intemperance, not only in regard to liquor but to all other forms of intemperance."

"I can pray for the success of the eighteenth amendment and for our Dry President. I can cast my vote for dry men and women," was the response made by Mrs. Floyd S. Buck.

"Talk it, advertise it, wear the white ribbon," urged Miss Margaret Young. "Be interested and attend the meetings."

Mrs. Fred Schloch of the Troy Union concluded that she might best serve her organization, "By saying and doing everything I can to uphold the eighteenth amendment and all other laws as well."

Following roll call, Mrs. Mary Kirkpatrick of the Troy Union entertained with humorous readings, and dainty refreshments concluded the program.

Bloomfield Group Enjoy Lane Rides

A ride in cool groves after sundown is one of the pleasant summer activities of the Bloomfield Open Hunt Club. On each Thursday evening a small group of equestrians enjoy the lane ride remaining at the club for dinner.

Among them are Dr. and Mrs. George P. Raynale, Mrs. C. Scott Hughes, Mrs. R. B. Huston, George W. Trendel, B. Z. Ferry, B. E. Hopper, F. W. Shuell, W. R. Tracy, W. G. Lerchen, Jr., Donald Flinterman, E. R. Thom and Guy S. Green.

From A WOMAN'S ANGLE

By MARJORIE ELAINE PORTER

Fall fashions!

How grown-up they look!

Seems like "playing-lady" all over again.

Remember when you used to stand on your tip-toes so you could see mamma's best hat trimmed with the black and white ostrich plumes, reposing on the shelf?

Remember how you used to admire her party and "reception gowns," as they hung in the closet? So many frills, so long and sweeping.

You would have given your best bisque doll for five minutes in those enchanting creations—but they were mamma's best.

All your life you looked forward to your first long—real long—skirt. Came the day and bitter disappointment.

Skirts as short as a terrier's tail!

And the hats!

At seven you thought at 17 you would surely be old enough for a "picture hat," the stunning kind Cousin Mabel had on in the photograph that used to be on mamma's dressing table.

Then the hats had to go informal too.

From kindergarten to high school you wore short skirts, and instead of growing up and blossoming out in long skirts at the romantic age of 18, you found yourself rushing around in skirts that would have seemed short to you at eight.

And like all the other girls, you pulled a sport hat over your eyes, pulled on a sweater, and there you were.

Not the "young lady" of your juvenile fancy. Just a smart, "collegiate little flapper." And everything that was Victorian was out.

Plumes and cuckoo-clocks and petticoats! Funny old relics!

And so, you never did feel as though you had "grown up." There hadn't been any transition. You know, what Longfellow meant when he wrote—"Standing with reluctant feet where the brook and river meet." They had never met. You felt as though you were still wading around in the brook—in short skirts.

Then rather suddenly, fashion precipitates you into the past. Today you find yourself garbed in long-skirted gowns with Victorian curves, and you wear an Empress Eugenie hat—with a plume. Not a "willow" plume—not yet—just a coquettish "tip." You feel like a reincarnation of grandma.

After all these years, you have arrived. Funny sensation, a skirt that falls below the ankles! And you have to spend some time before the vanity to get your hat "on straight."

You just have to pack your flapper manners in moth balls! They are out. Dignity has returned with the long skirts.

These are not frivolous times, and fashions are more mature. You don't have to "play lady" any more. Here is your chance to be one!

Here is another proof of conservatism in styles.

To wit: designers attending the annual exposition of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, held in Boston recently predict that black and dark browns will predominate in autumn footwear.

Well, what do you think of this?

Women made six of the eight new international aviation records established the past year in the United States.

This fact was revealed by the contest committee of the National Aeronautical Association at its annual convention held in Washington recently.

Amelia Earhart has two of the six records to her credit.

"You must remember," Miss Earhart pointed out, "women haven't had access to the military equipment which made possible the establishment of the world altitude record and the world speed record. They have made these records in spite of handicaps."

And now comes Mrs. Caroline-Mc Donald-Walters-Bronson-Burgess-Chevallier-Gardner-White-Luigi-Hatfield-Willis-Paschal.

The lady who married the city directory.

Well anyway, she had 11 husbands and 14 children.

She is still the wife of No. 11, but then next year is leap year.
