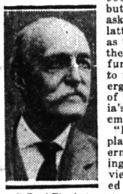
Pinchot Felt Confident Mellon Would'nt Refuse Million Dollar 'Loan'

Emergency Relief Plan Of Pennsylvania Governor Given Plenty Of Publicity, Though Secretary Of Treasury Declined

By CHARLES P. STEWART
Central Press Staff Writer

WASHINGTON.—Gov. Gifford Pinchot felt confident he would get from Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon the $1,000,000 contribution which he asked from the latter, to serve as the kernel of the $35,000,000 fund he hoped to raise for emergency relief of Pennsylvania's 900,000 unemployed.



Gifford Pinchot

"Because," explained the governor, following the interview terminated by the treasury secretary with his promise to "consider the matter further," "I don't see how he can get out of contributing it."

There was that in Governor Pinchot's manner which implied the reverse of confidence of an enthusiastic contribution by Mr. Mellon.

His intonation rather than his words gave this impression.

One of the newspaper boys had just inquired, "Did the secretary accede to your request?"

To which the governor answered, "He did not."

Had he said, "No, he didn't," or some such thing, while equally a negative, it would not have carried the same distinct emphasis as the deliberately uttered, rather peculiarly inflected, tri-syllabic, "He did not."

* * *

GOVERNOR PINCHOT frankly is a believer in publicity.

Having submitted his $1,000,000 plea to Secretary Mellon and obtained the secretary's pledge at least to "consider the matter further," on his way to the Senate Office building to see his friend, Senator George W. Norris, prior to departing for Harrisburg, he had stopped in at the press gallery in the Capitol building to tell as many correspondents as possible, all at once, of his call at the treasury department and its outcome.

That he did so under the impression that broadcasting the story might influence Mr. Mellon in the direction of liberality cannot be stated positively. Still, it is difficult to imagine that he visited the press gallery spilled the yarn in the hope of hushing it up.

A few days later Secretary Mellon informed the governor that he could not make the loan.

* * *

Governor Pinchot had referred to $1,000,000 quite cavalierly, as if he had anticipated Mr. Mellon would take it out of his pocket and hand it over as soon as Pennsylvania's urgent necessity for it had been explained to him.

Some of the correspondents had regarded it quite a large sum.

"But you see," the governor had pointed out, "the state needs it only as a loan. My idea is that the entire $35,000,000 will be repaid, with 4 per cent interest, by a bond issue to be floated after a constitutional amendment authorizing it has been adopted in 1933. Unfortunately the bonds cannot be issued now, because Pennsylvania's unamended constitution limits its indebtedness and we are up to the limit. The amendment must come first and the unemployed cannot wait."

"But," suggested one of the scribes, "suppose the amendment fails. What becomes of Secretary Mellon's $1,000,000 then?"

"In that event," said the governor, with a broad grin, "the poor man will be impoverished for the rest of his life. But candidly," he added, "his risk is not one-half of 1 per cent."

* * *

THE PENNSYLVANIA executive's relief plan, he has made it clear, is supplementary to his employment plan.

Chiefly concerned for the moment in the success of his effort successfully to launch his $35,000,000 "loan-contribution" campaign, he touched only lightly upon the Keystone State's public works program in his press gallery chat, but the nub of it is available in his recent message to the legislature, to be found on every newspaper man's desk in Washington—the governor sees to that, or Secretary Stahlnecker does; he overlooks no bets.

The gubernatorial recommendation, in brief, calls for a 2-cent additonal tax on gasoline, 1 mill on each cigaret and a variable levy on billboards, to raise an estimated $75,000,000 for improvements on a scale to furnish jobs to all the able-bodied but involuntarily idle in the commonwealth.

So vast an emergency properly is a problem for the federal government to solve, the governor still insists, but since the federal government is not doing it, as he bitterly complains, the state, he agrees, must do its best.

* * *

THE NUMBER of the Pennsylvania unemployed, he explains, has been ascertained with what he believes to be more than approximate exactness, through questionnaires addressed to pupils in the public schools, as amounting to 450,000 in the state's big cities and as many more in the mines, throughout the countryside and in the smaller towns.

As for private charity? "Totally inadequate," says the governor.

"A dollar a week per person. Who is there who does not know that a human being at present-day prices cannot live on that? Besides, there are other necessaries of life in addition to food."

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—

Clarence Vliet, superintendent of schools: "Congressman McFadden's statements in the House of Representatives the other day were quite sensational, but time will tell whether there is not some truth behind them. I don't believe that President Hoover is knowingly guilty of any such collusion as the Congressman charged, but I feel that there are men in the large international banking groups who are shrewd and unscrupulous enough to perpetrate such a thing."
