1932 Will Be As Good Or As Bad As You Make It

AS YOU MARCE IT

To you, as eternity unwinds its endless scroll of years, comes another calendar year, 1932. Within its folds are wrapped everything that is possible to manishin. For you and me, though, there is the chance to choose. We are not compelled to receive and retain anything that is not good for us.

If you will adopt these few suggested thoughts, perhaps you will gain a new idea of our human years, and who knows but what you will be much happier in the process? If, then, you will look upon 1932 as merely a span of endless time within a universe, and that you and everybody else just happen to be conscious organisms at this particular time in the earth's life, you'will begin to see that, after all, we are alive only as we react to this world through our thoughts. What you think, then, determines who and what you are, doesn't it?

If, as a growing child, you are sent to an art school, chances are that you will become an artist—for all u took to the art school was a state of conscious; which you caused to be made into recalible ords of what you learned at the art school. Had been sent to a law school, a medical school, or a hnological institute, you would have graduated tha connacious knowledge of the specific studies you arged in. Of this you may be sure: the correct study art, law, medicine, or some industrial pursuit yould have made you something aside from their own dt. If you wish to become a violinity, you study sic as it is applied to the technique of a violin, udying a violin does not make you an excellent eklayer.

All of which suggests merely this: if you want to a certain kind of person, attain a particular objection life, you are required to dwell upon it mentally, ponder it thoughtfully, to act upon your thoughts the time.

What does 1952 hold for all of us? An Advertising Parable

Here is a new parable with a moral pointing the value of persistent advertising:

A husband, arriving home at night, asked his wife: "How long, Mary, since I began calling you Mary?"

She replied, puzzled: "Why, you've always called me Mary!"

"Well, that's the way it seems to me, too, remarked the husband, thoughtfully, "but after all we weren't children together. We did meet somewhere or other, and there must have been a "Miss and Mr.' period, although for the life of me I don't know when. Do you?"

The wife impatiently answered: "I don't know and don't care. Come, hurry, we're late now."

And that's the whole of the parable. It is used by the editor of the Woman's Home Companion, however to show what advertising does for a product of ment. Makes people call it by its first name. Grainst the wall in Olney's black-mith shop, fell down on Monday or creater firendships so deep that people can even don't care to the control of the work of the parable. It is used by the editor of the Woman's Home Companion, however to show what advertising does for a product of ment. Makes people call it by its first name. Creater firendships so deep that people can even don't remember when they really began.

"Check up on this parable sometime," suggests an advertising man. "When did you first meet the dentiffree, the cereal, the packaged or cannel foods, the parable of the parable. The product of the dentiffree, the cereal, the packaged or cannel foods, the parable of the par
