Conferences On Child Health Raise Welfare Standards

"An enormous amount of knowledge has been gained in regard to the care of the infant and child and is at the disposal of those who will use it," according to Dr. Harold R. Roehm of Barbour terrace who attended the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection last week in Washington, D. C. "Much remains to be discovered. Scientific medical knowledge has been somewhat hampered in its dissemination by ignorance, prejudice, beliefs in witchcraft, and incompetency. Exploitation of scientific discoveries has been consistently accomplished by various commercial concerns and persons, who delude the public into believing that what they offer is indeed based upon the scientific fact that they ad-

"As a result of the Washington conference, concerted and united action will take place among those who deal with the child and its problems, standards of child welfare will be raised, more will be demanded of the social service worker, the community, the nurse and the physician, and the country will raise itself out of the present attitude of indifference which permits a maternal mortality almost as great as in China, and deaths from such preventable diseases as diphtheria and small pox.

"The Section on Medical Service of the White House Conference at Washington which has just ended is the third that has been called by Presidents of the United States to consider the welfare of the children of this country. The first conference met at Washington in January, 1909, at the request of President Roosevelt, the second in 1919 at the request of President Wilson, and the present one first met at President Hoover's request in November, 1930. Final meeting of the Medical Section of this conference has just taken place.

"As a result of the meeting of the Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor was organized, which was to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birthrate, orphanages, juvenile courts, insidious dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children, the Soviet states, etc.

"The conference of 1919 included representatives of the allied nations, but was limited because of post-war conditions. Tentative child welfare standards were suggested, but were never modified by a special committee as a result of suggestions from regional conferences. The standards have aged as guides in shaping community plans for children, and have had a marked influence in the development of legislation and administration in the various States.

"These first conferences were concerned principally with the dependent child. The last conference has been inclusive in its scope. It has carried on its work in four main sections, Medical Service, Public Health, Education and Training, and the Handicapped.

"The Medical Service section was subdivided into three committees, as follows: Growth and Development, K. D. Blackfan, M. D., Professor of Pediatrics at Harvard, Chairman; Prenatal and Maternal Care, F. L. Adair, M. D., Professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology, University of Chicago, and P. Van Ingen, M. D., President of the American Pediatric Society, Chairman.

"Impossibility of stating in any detail the proceedings of the Medical Section will be understood when we say that it is estimated that the committee reports which the members of the conference will receive will make up 25 volumes of 100 pages each.

"Under Growth and Development of the Child the following aspects were reviewed: general anatomical and physiological considerations, preventive medicine and a national survey of the effect of present public and private medical service.

"Under Prenatal and Maternal Care were reviews of the present state in city and rural communities, organizations devoted to such care, factors and causes of foetal, early infant and maternal mortality and mortality; obstetric teaching and education of midwives, nurses, lay and social workers, basic sciences and their relation to maternal and foetal problems, and obstetric teaching and education of physicians.

"Under the section on Medical Care for Children, psychiatry and psychology, orthopedics and body mechanics, nursing, hospitals, and dispensaries, convalescent care, foster home for convalescence, pediatric education, medical social service, health centers, dentistry and oral hygiene, nutrition, and prevention and care of disease have been considered."
