The MAYTAG
BUILT WITH THE ENGINEERING REFINEMENT OF THE FINEST AUTOMOBILE

Until you have tried a Maytag, you cannot appreciate what such a feature as the auto-type shift lever means to you. It engages smoothly and quietly to start or stop the water action. It may be conveniently operated from any side of the tub. The action of the lever is so smooth that it is possible to move the lever from the "on" or "off" position by a light push of the fore-arm or with the back of the hand, when the hands are wet and soapy. This feature is typical of refinements throughout the Maytag.

VILLAGE REJECTS PARK PROPOSALS

Drops Suggestions For New Public Fountain On Learning Cost

Proposals for a new public drinking fountain on the village park at the corner of West Maple and Baldwin roads were rejected by the Village Commission Monday night when Village Manager Parry reported the cost of the project would be from $1200 to $1500.

Suggested improvements, which included an impressive fountain-gateway to the park and extensive landscaping, had been laid before the Commission by Murray and Goudy, Birmingham architects.

Mr. Parry's report recommended a continuation of present arrangements at the park, pointing out that the fountain was erected there only last year as part of a more elaborate plan which is intended to be worked out gradually over a period of years. The fountain is now operated at an expense to the village of about $75 a year, he said.

Huron Tire Company Gets New Manager

Announcement is made this week by E. S. Barden, formerly manager of the Huron Tire Company, 534 South Woodward avenue, of the appointment of Sam W. Dance, of Port Wayne, Ind., to succeed him here. Mr. Barden has been connected with the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, whose products are sold by the Huron Tire company, for several years. He lives on Dorchester road. He will assume new duties with the Detroit branch of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co.

"I deeply appreciate the splendid associations I have made in this vicinity through the Huron Tire company and I bespeak for my successor, Mr. Dance, the same co-operation that was accorded me," stated Mr. Barden yesterday in announcing the change.

Give Your Garden The Variety of Spice

Here is a new idea for the gardener who is casting about with a view to novelty in next year's garden. Have you ever thought of an herb garden? No, not to compound old fashioned remedies for spring tonics, but to bring to your table the spicy flavors so popular in the continental cuisine.

The European cook depends on the flavor of sweet herbs grown abroad to give the magic taste that makes so many of his dishes world-renowned.

American cookery is paying more attention to seasoning than ever before. The hotel chef is learning from his foreign cousin how to tickle the palate of his native patron. And when the Man of the Family returns from a metropolitan excursion, and exclaims on the aromatic delicacies upon which he has feasted, you will want to have some defense.

Easy To Grow

Let it be an herb garden. Then on a moment's notice you can add the spice of variety to an otherwise prosaic meal, which will rival that of the "artiste" in the hotel kitchen.

These herbs can be grown quite easily from either seeds or plants. You can dry the leaves for storing so that you will have them readily available in your spice cupboard.

Did you ever hear of seasoning the stuffing of ducks and geese with sweet marjoram? This is one of the secrets of the German cook's success.

Needs Little Room

It is an annual quite easily grown from seed, but sometimes difficult to find on the market. No doubt you have an obscure corner of your yard in which you have no plants, and which would be just the thing for a row of sweet marjoram.

When the plant is mature, pull it up by the roots, and hang it up to dry. When it is thoroughly dried the leaves and stems can be rubbed to powder, and stored for future use.

Other herbs much used in cooking that can be grown in a two-by-four patch of garden are basil, thyme and the savories. All of these grow rapidly, so could be planted now. Among the plants to be started now for next year is the already well known caraway seed to grace the top of sugar cookies. Caraway is a biennial, as is dill, the spice that made the pickle famous.

Double Purpose

To serve the dual purpose of ornamentation as well as use, plant sage. It is a perennial, and because of its color, sage green, adds a touch to the flower garden where it can be planted without detriment to the general effect.

It can be raised either from seed or from plants. You will find half a dozen plants will produce an ample supply of leaves. An old favorite in summer savory, which, by the way, adds a spicy taste to the common string bean. This dish was an old-time favorite, but it has been re-discovered, and is becoming popular again.

Sometime when you are looking through a foreign cook-book you may come upon a recipe that calls for chervil. You may not recognize it by that name, but it is a relative of the parsley family and is as easily grown as parsley.

An Old Friend

Of course, parsley is an old familiar friend. It is a dainty garnish when plucked fresh from the garden patch and can also be dried for spice. Parsley is really the only herb to which sufficient attention has been paid to cultivate different varieties.

The flavor is the same regardless of variety, but some types are less attractive for garnishing purposes. This depends upon the fineness of diversion of the leaves. For a home grown variety, the fern-leaved is very decorative, although the moss-curled types are perhaps the most popular.

When you are gathering parsley for drying, select only the dark green leaves, as they are the older ones, and contain most oil and least water. Yellow leaves are no good for any purpose. Parsley seed is slow to germinate, but if sown now it will be ready for use by fall. You can raise it all winter under a frame or in flower pots to adorn your kitchen window sill.

Dry Leaves For Flavor

In planning and planting your herb garden, be sure to give each plant room enough to develop to full capacity. Remember, the more space it has in which to grow, the more leaves it will produce. In most herbs, it is the dry leaves that give the flavor.

You can raise your task of routine cooking to the pinnacle of culinary art if you learn the secret of seasoning with the right herbs. A few packages of seed, an herb garden, old dishes with a new flavor—and your husband will forget all about your rival, the European chef.

No Mere Shadow

A neighbor took Doris, aged nine, to see the embalmed whale. When she returned home she rushed to her mother all thrills and said, "Oh, I saw a whale this afternoon."

"Indeed!" was the reply. "In the moving pictures, I suppose."

"No, indeed," was the scornful answer, "in person."—Chicago Tribune.
