WHO'S WHO AND TIMELY VIEWS

Federal Reserve Held Responsible for Slump's Severity

By ADOLPH C. MILLER
Member, Federal Reserve Board

(Adolph Caspar Miller was born at San Francisco, Jan. 7, 1866. He is a graduate of the University of California and Harvard, later studying at Paris and Munich. He taught economics at Harvard, history and politics at the University of California, and political economy and finance at Cornell before becoming professor of finance at the University of Chicago. He held the latter post ten years and was then professor of economics and commerce at the University of California from 1902 to 1913. He was assistant to the secretary of the interior at Washington for a year and has been a member of the Federal Reserve board since 1914.)

THE NECESSITY of a strong Federal Reserve board in control of the policy and operations of the Federal Reserve system is amply demonstrated by the events of recent years. In my 17 years on the board I feel that it has been pretty well demonstrated that a group of conscientious men of high character and good intelligence sitting constantly with these problems somewhat remote from the atmosphere of the great money centers is capable of an objective and detached view such as the ablest men are incapable of in the atmosphere of the large centers.

Adolph Miller

In my opinion the safety of the Federal Reserve system for the country depends upon the ability, strength, wisdom and independence of Federal Reserve board members. Because of the vast consequences to the world dependent upon the policies of the Federal Reserve system, that policy must be broad and regarded as a public policy. It has been abundantly demonstrated by recent years of Federal Reserve history that the need is for an able wise body with a keen sense of its responsibility to the congress that created it, and with a broader insight and better understanding of the problems before them.

No act of omission or commission on the part of the Federal Reserve system could have prevented the present depression. Its causes were too deep seated. It was inevitable, but if there had been a greater awareness on the part of the system of what was involved in the complex situation, the Federal Reserve would have pursued a more careful policy, and the crisis would have been less severe and the aftermath less forlorn.

The Federal Reserve system has not been fully conscious of what it has been doing. It has thought that it might do something to alter the psychology of business, to arrest depression by an easy-money policy. In 1924 it thought that it could or ought to do something to improve the international situation. It likewise had the foolish illusion, and particularly so in 1927, that the Federal Reserve system or any system could correct the so-called maldistribution of gold. That illusion still persists in some Federal Reserve circles and it is one of the most fatal illusions that men responsible for the credit policies of the country could entertain.

THE OTHER CHAP SAYS SOMETHING

FRIENDSHIP

On New Year's day Frank Fitzgerald became secretary of state. At the same time Clark Brown, long an employe in the secretary of state's office, became deputy secretary of state. The deputy of each department in Lansing is the highest ranking official of the department outside of the elective officials and therefore Mr. Brown will have complete charge of all the work of the secretary of state's office directly under Mr. Fitzgerald's supervision and when Mr. Fitzgerald happens to be away, his deputy is directly in charge of the many hundreds of employes and all other matters pertaining to the secretary of state's office.

These facts are mentioned simply for the purpose of pointing out to you the importance of the position that Mr. Brown has been appointed to by Mr. Fitzgerald and that appointment is due to a friendship established something like 20 years ago when both Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Brown were mere clerks in the office they now control. Mr. Brown was an employe of the secretary of state's office before Mr. Fitzgerald and when Mr. Fitzgerald was given a better position in the department he was an assistant to Mr. Brown. Mr. Brown who had worked in a newspaper office, was a proofreader and Mr. Fitzgerald "held copy" for Mr. Brown.

As time went on both won promotions and finally Mr. Brown became head of the compilation department, one of the most important in the secretary of state's office. As one of his latest duties Mr. Brown had to look after the vast amount of detail work for Secretary of State John Haggerty that resulted from the recent governorship recount.

A few days after the ballots of the last state election had been counted, Mr. Fitzgerald called Clark Brown over to his office in the state highway department.

"Well, Clark I guess you will be my deputy if you want to be," the newly elected secretary is reported to have said to his visitor.

The brief conference resulted in the decision of Mr. Brown to become assistant to the new state official who had way back in years past been an assistant to him.

Neither of the two can be rexaded as "politicians" in any sense of the word—but both have reflected the same kind of real friendship that lies back of Mr. Fitzgerald's appointment of Mr. Brown to his new position in the department.

Michigan need have no fear of the business of the secretary of state's office as it would be impossible to find two more worthy and efficient public officials than Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Brown. —Elton R. Eaton in Northville Record.

STATE AND LOCAL TAXES

Often attention has been called in this column to the fact that most people are watching the state tax levy with fear and trembling, and are rather disinterested in the figures affecting their local communities. Let us say that there will never be any material tax relief in Michigan until it is effected in the smaller subdivisions of government.

Recent figures compiled show the following:

That Michigan school taxes in 1913 were $11,867,000 in 1929, $81,050,000;

That county taxes in Michigan in 1913 were $7,403,000 in 1929, $19,843,000;

That other local taxes were $22,707,000 in 1913 in 1929 $114,231,000;

That the total LOCAL tax levies in 1913 were $41,978,000 in 1929, $215,111,000.

Take last item above really tells the story. Local taxes—school, city, county and township—increased from forty-one to two hundred thirty-five millions from 1913 to 1929 inclusive. That is an increase of nearly two hundred millions of dollars. Compare that with the increase of the state levy, taking into consideration the constantly increasing burdens and responsibilities of the state. The same set of figures shows state taxes in 1913 were $8,791,000, and in 1929 reached a peak of $29,500,000.

While people are satisfied in their alarm at increased taxes, they should devote more attention to the real source of the increase. The state is responsible for $20,000,000 of it, while local government and schools have added $200,000,000—ten times as much.—Schuyler L. Marshall in Clinton County Republican News.
