Prof. Oat Williams, in his prints on display at the Cranbrook Museum of Art, is said to prove himself a master of his medium. "Varying his methods as suits his subject and the mood he strives to suggest. On the one hand his use of line is strong and decisive, while again he becomes the painter, reaching on tone rather than line when occasion demands. This, for instance, is his method in a beautiful study of an angler, who seems to be whirling, almost floating in space, her little figure the beautiful subject of his medium.
