

THREE FINED ON LIQUOR CHARGES

Detroiters Used Woodward Avenue For Speedway, Police Claim

Three Detroiters who used Woodward avenue as a speedway for the automobile in which they were riding were arrested Sunday night by Bloomfield Hills police and paid fines the next morning to Justice Floyd S. Buck. They were Fiddle Battiaux, 12463 Mitchell street, Detroit, who was fined $100 for drunk driving; Leo Wryaplewicz, 3389 McDougall street, Detroit, and Sylvester Staniewicz, 1347 1/2 Reynolds street, Detroit, both of whom paid fines for being drunk and disorderly.

Police said Battiaux drove back and forth on Woodward avenue at Bloomfield Hills village several times, and was arrested after he had gotten on the wrong side of the highway.

Millions of Dollars for Law Study

Gift Of Wealthy Attorney Brings About Great Legal Center At University Of Michigan, Where Structures Housing It Cover Area Of Two City Blocks

ANN ARBOR—At its completion next January the legal center or Lawyers Quadrangle of the University of Michigan will be the only institution in the world where all the physical equipment for carrying on an advanced professional study of the law is concentrated in one closely connected unit.

Within the area of two city blocks, housed in buildings that embody the best features of the old English inns with those of the halls of Oxford and Cambridge, will be all the classrooms, dormitories, offices, research libraries, commons and recreation facilities for 300 men, a large faculty and visiting members of the legal profession. The entire center will be a modern American Gothic style.

Alumnus Gives $3,000,000 The unique unit was made possible by the gift of a graduate of the university, the late William W. Cook, who planned the various buildings, gave $8,000,000 for their construction, and in his will left the greater part of his personal fortune, and additional $12,000,000 for their endowment. Cook never revisited the campus after his graduation in 1882, and although a great amount of work had been completed on the legal center prior to his death in June, 1930, he preferred to visualize the quadrangle from the blueprints.

Cook, who embraced the law as a life work, was born in Hillsdale, Mich., in 1838, and was graduated from the University of Michigan Law school. Following graduation he went to New York, where he became general counsel for the Mackay telegraph and cable companies, and where he became famous as the author of many legal articles and books on public utility problems.

After working for many years on a plan for a large quadrangle of buildings that would include homes and a social center for law students, a building to house the law library, and a recreation and administration building, Cook conferred with the dean of the law school and the late President Hutchins of the University of Michigan. The various buildings were to form a quadrangle and face an inner court.

Work Begun in '22

In 1922 work was begun on the Lawyers' club building and the dormitories. The Lawyers' club provides rooms for 100 students, a great dining hall, Gothic in architecture, spacious lounge in Renaissance style, and a beautiful recreation room. Along the inside of the building facing the inner court is a cloister with an oak beam roof and iron lanterns. The dormitories are arranged in English college apartment style.

In 1930 the John J. Cook dormitory was completed for the accommodation of 117 additional students. In the center of the dormitory, which was named for William Cook's father, John Fuller Cook, a pioneer in the development of the state of Michigan, is a large room containing a full length portrait of John Cook, and nine stained glass windows filled by designs symbolic of the various branches of the law.

During his lifetime Cook had refused to have his own name attached to any building, but the Research Library building at Ann Arbor, completed last June, was named the William W. Cook Legal Research building. It is the most massive structure in the quadrangle, dominating it in its own right, and designed to accommodate 275,000 books, hundreds of readers, and numerous research scholars in separate research rooms.

The final building, which now is under construction, will be opened for use in the near future. It is Hutchins Hall, which will cost $1,000,000 and will house all faculty and administration offices, classrooms and study halls.

These facilities for study, research and the interchange of ideas in the Legal Quadrangle place the University of Michigan at the front in the field of law.

The Festival of Thanksgiving

BACK AGAIN for Thanksgiving! Back for the day when we pause to voice our appreciation of the things we have which make for happiness. A vast amount of history has been made since the first Thanksgiving Day, but the things we feel appreciation for are in essence much the same. Our homes, our automobiles and radios attune to the advancement of the age, but the fundamentals of family and health and peace continue to give us joy and satisfaction, without which modern improvements would be meaningless.

While we try to preserve a humility about our possessions, we are bound to have pride, too... pride in our standing, in our acquisitions, pride in our community. As we take stock of our assets today we form a new determination to help make more creditable history—however small, however local—before Thanksgiving comes around again. And in making plans like this we look forward to co-operating with, and having the co-operation of, our neighbors and our associates toward the common achievement of our citizenry and our community... toward a fuller reason for Thanksgiving Day each year.
