From A WOMAN'S ANGLE

By MARJORIE ELAINE PORTER

Uncle Spoofoos is on the air children.

He is going to tell you about Goldie Locks and the three Borees. There was once a little girl with such bright yellow curls that everyone called her Goldie Locks. She was dainty as a doll, with round cheeks of pink and white, and big blue eyes that looked mysteriously at everyone.

Goldie Locks' hair and eyes were very pretty, but they caused her great deal of trouble. She was always being pursued by Borees. It seemed as if nearly every other man she met turned out to be one of these terrible "Where-have-you-been-all-my-life?" borees.

"Do people think just because a girl is blond she hasn't any sense—or any memory?" mused Goldie as she rambled out her

At last the guests arrived, and Goldie Locks found herself surrounded by three new admirers. The first was a genti sort, a trifle too reticent, maybe, but he seemed bent on enjoying himself. The second was nice to look at for a girl who admires "rugged strength." He was tall and self-possessed, with hair that reminded Goldie of the Grand Canyon at sunset. It had copper lights and seemed to stand in rocky ripples.

The third—"Girls oh girls! What a man!" thought Goldie Locks, as his great "understanding" eyes smiled wistfully in recognition of the introduction of the Grand Canyon of the Grand Canyon at sunset. It had copper lights and seemed to stand in rocky ripples.

For a few minutes they sat in silence, then Goldie Locks' heart beat fast when, for there in the door stood Adonis.

"I'm sorry, but I say, aren't you interested in that, of course?"

"You see, I've never had time to play. Don't now. When business is good, there's so much of it a fellow simply can't crawl out from under the load, and when it's bad, he can't afford to leave it to play. I'm afraid you'll find me a social liability."

Then she was dancing on Olympus. Far below, it seemed, "Grand Canyon" smoked his solitary pipe on the terrace.

He drew her closer, and touching his lips were silent, his eyes spoke earnestly to hers.

"Ever hear the story about the fat Scotchman?" he asked as they started to dance.

"No," she answered politely.

"Neither did I, heh heh! Scotchmen don't get fat," was his witty reply.

"Did you hear about Hazel?"

"Hazel?" she inquired politely.

"Yes, she's a nut. Ho, ho, and a couple h's."

"No are you?" thought Goldie

Grand Trunk Gives Banquet To Celebration Committee

Nearly 100 members, with their wives and friends, of the committee which sponsored the celebration, were entertained at a banquet given by the Grand Trunk Railway at the Grand Trunk Hotel last night.

The banquet was given in honor of the Grand Trunk Railway which took occasion, in the words of C. G. Bowker, general manager of the railroad, to thank its numerous customers for more for the splendid cooperation it gave in making the celebration a success.

Following a beautiful banquet, the assemblage was addressed by several officials of the Grand Trunk and its various committee members. Don Jordan, who served as executive chairman of the celebration, acted as toastmaster.

"In my 40 years of railroad experience," said Mr. Bowker, "I have had three different occasions to witness the inauguration of a commuter service, but never before did I see a communitarian behind the project and put it over with real co-operation like you did here in Birmingham and in other centers along the suburban zone."

Patrons of the new line have had three different occasions to witness the inauguration of a commuter service, but never before did I see a communitarian behind the project and put it over with real co-operation like you did here in Birmingham and in other centers along the suburban zone."

He envisioned rapid future growth of the territory in and around Birmingham, and read statistics showing how Chicago suburbs have grown enormously with the introduction of suburban train service.

Other Grand Trunk officials who spoke included W. R. Davidson, assistant general manager; A. B. Chown, passenger traffic manager; H. J. McLaughry, general agent of the passenger department; and J. B. Minton, local agent.

Harry Allen, village president, speaking as a member of the celebration committee, expressed the belief that "Detroit is destined to become the third city in the United States, and that means that this Birmingham area will grow."

"Our task here," he continued, "is to keep Birmingham a strictly residential community. If we do this we shall not have to worry about where our new citizens will come from—for they'll be certain to move out along the zone served by the Grand Trunk commuter service."

Praises Service H. T. Ellerby, former village president, praised the service, and said that any part he was able to do for the celebration was merely in the line of good citizenship. Mr. Ellerby's attitude was also voiced by Charles A. Bingham, George B. Boutwell, Arthur Wingard, chief of Police John F. Hackett, Charles B. Randall James Jr., Martinale Dr. John B. Hassberger Raymond H. Peck, George R. Averill and David H. Ladd.

Mr. Ladd, who served as general chairman of the celebration, complimented all those who aided in bringing about its success and said that "this community can always be counted upon to aid the Grand Trunk in any future improvement it seeks to inaugurate."

"No credit? or no brains?"

A brilliant man... yet a failure! As he gloomily stared into space, the words of his father resounded to his mind...

"Guard your credit as a sacred trust. Buy only what you can pay for and pay your bills when due. Lack of credit causes more failures than lack of brains."

Many so-called "brains" men live in poverty, haunted by the success they could have had if and if only... Yet the plodding man, careful of his credit standing, becomes the successful man.

You know yourself that nothing gives you quite so much confidence and self-respect as the prompt payment of your bills. And in time of need you do not have to beg for credit... it is always given to you promptly and generously!

After all it's only a question of fair play. You promise to pay within a certain time. It's up to you to keep that promise or lose the help and confidence of your creditors.

A new helpful booklet relieves fretting about bills and adds to the pleasure of using credit. Send for it.
