Group To Discuss Year Abroad For College Students

Increasing emphasis on better college teaching will be the subject of an address by Mrs. Paul Penfield today before members of the group studying the "Changing Standards in Education," which meets each Thursday at the Baldwin Public Library.

Mrs. Penfield will include in her talk a discussion of the tutorial system employed at Harvard and Radcliffe Colleges, and the preceptorial system as used at Princeton University.

Mrs. J. K. Ormond will also address the group on the "Junior Year Abroad Plan" followed by Smith College.

The program, announced by Mrs. Fred D. Farrar, director of the class, for the following week includes a talk on vocational guidance by Irwin C. Johnson, director of boys' work for the Episcopal Diocese of Michigan. This meeting will be held at the Library at 7 P. M.

The class is sponsored by the Birmingham Branch of the American Association of University Women.

Mrs. Annie McElwee of Harrisburg, Pa., to make her future home with her son, A. W. McElwee.

J. G. Moorhouse and his sons, Cecil and Melvin, of Maryland boulevard spent the week-end duck hunting north of Hay City, returning Monday evening.

Mrs. Orren E. Andrews of Harrisburg avenue had as her house guest last week, Miss Alta M. Smith of Philadelphia.

From A WOMAN'S ANGLE

By MARJORIE ELAINE PORTER

Of all the jobs held by women one of the trickiest is keeping the matrimonial tetter at an even balance.

To every bride it's the easiest thing in the world because, of course, she and Jim are different!

She wouldn't think of doing the silly and unwise on a lie things of her women do.

Marjorie E. Porter generation is too broadminded to make the mistakes that grandma made. Even her mother's aim of about marriage has to be taken with a grain of salt and a little tolerance.

And Jim may have his faults, but he will never misunderstand her.

Then they are married. Unconsciously, each one follows a pattern, after the honeymoon is over. What each becomes depends largely upon the other.

Someday the wife may wake up to the fact that Jim isn't the pattern she thought she selected.

This is the critical point, and the one at which the matrimonial tetter sometimes takes a flop. Usually a wife makes one of two mistakes.

There is the too ambitious wife who, in the effort to keep her end up, unconsciously keeps her husband's end down by constant driving and nagging.

And there is the other extreme who in the effort to keep her husband's end up, keeps her own down.

Both amount to failure in the end. So both are wrong.

Take for instance the look that you were when I married you type of wife. She is under the delusion that when her husband married her he won a prize of a matrimonial compass.

She is the North Star and if he takes her advice he can't go wrong. And when things do go wrong, obviously he didn't follow her infallible instructions.

Her end of the tetter tetter always up. She has the initiative, intelligence, ambition of the two, she sadly admits to herself. And she will say to her friends:

"I should have been a man!" She should have been Mrs.

him or leave him, it's for his wife to say.

But in fairness be it said, he is the exception not the rule.

At best, the matrimonial tetter tetter has its ups and downs.

It is, of course, beyond the power of either husband or wife to keep it swinging evenly without the help of the other.

But if a woman doesn't care whether the atmosphere of her home is conducive to the happiness of both, she should not be surprised if her end of the matrimonial tetter tetter should come down someday with a sudden bump.

As an adoring bride she tries too hard to please her husband. Yes, even today, one finds the as-you-say-dear wife.

She flatters, pampers and pets her husband. She worries about him and does him up when he has a cold and insists upon accompanying him on every possible occasion.

She makes him feel so darned uncomfortable! In the beginning, he knows he isn't the alabaster Sir Galahad he can see reflected in her eyes every time she looks at him.

He is embarrassed so he tries to be casual, even gruff. Of course, he takes her devotion for granted. He is perfectly willing to have her keep his end of the tetter tetter up.

He becomes selfish, spoiled, just an impossible uptight around the house. He considers his wife a sweet but brainless thing, and of course, he's right.

What she needs is a good innuendo of a sense of humor.

But the woman who has learned the difficult trick of keeping things at a harmonious balance is the one who preserves her husband's happiness and her own.

She is neither aggressive about her own virtues nor offensive about his faults.

She may admonish and advise, but she does not scold nor blame. She praises him but not too often, and only perhaps when she feels he needs a dash of encouragement.

She plays the game fairly and appeals to his sense of humor and of sportsmanship.

And she wins. For the average man responds to such companionship.

Occasionally one finds a man who seems to feel he is a law unto himself.

Whether it is in obeying the fundamental laws or in observing the common courtesies of society, he suits his own pleasure regardless of the pain or inconvenience he may be causing others or the injury he may be doing himself.

With such a man—well, love

GIRL-SCOUT ACTIVITIES

Lee A. White will tell of his travels abroad and show motion pictures made on his recent tour, Monday evening in the Girl Scout headquarters at the Community House.

Those invited to attend include members of the Girl Scout Council, committee members, Scout leaders and friends. The meeting will open at 8 P. M. Mrs. Fred W. Johnson is general chairman.

Birmingham Girl Scouts will observe "Go To Church Sunday" Oct. 25, by attending in a body the morning service at the First Methodist Episcopal Church. Scouts are asked to meet at the Community House at 10:30 A. M. Sunday.

The Girl Scout Council will sponsor a training class for leaders, which will open this evening at the Community House in the Girl Scout headquarters. The class will meet every alternate Thursday evening at 7:00 P. M. for eight classes. Miss Ellen Hathaway, local Scout director in Pontiac, will be the instructor.
