the play a realism found in pro-fessional companies.

Perhaps the greatest praise that can be offered the performance audience—that he came to watch the acting, but was unable to do so because of interest in the play. Caroline Reilly, as the direc-the amooth-working performance, and the excellent stage effects. Captain Towle's scenery, as usual, drew applause even before the play started, and the shortness of ed the growing efficiency of the stage crew.

Something, too, must be said-for the author, "Paris Bound" is incley divided between comedy and tragedy, with splendidly sparkling lines and an excellent idea as a basis.
