Have you a manufacturing process using a small amount of HEAT?

HEAT?

Such jobs can often be done cheaper with electric heat because it can be confined nearly 100 per cent to its job—just as in large electric melting and heat treating furnaces. It isn't the heat you pay for but the efficiency of use that determines comparative economy. With electric heat there is no waste in heating up the surrounding atmosphere and it doesn't go "up the flue."

The cost of small electric industrial heating units is low. For example a small cartridge supplying a "spot" of heat costs only $2. A "strip" heater which has a multitude of uses may be purchased for $1.50. A liquid-heating unit that is adaptable to any number of jobs is priced at $10. And these are only some of the more common devices. There are countless electric heating units designed exactly to suit your own particular needs.

It will pay you to investigate this subject. Our engineers will gladly discuss with you any heating problem you may have (no matter how small) and submit recommendations. There is no obligation—we do not sell this equipment. Simply call the nearest Detroit Edison office.
