The date of responsibility will be laid aside Saturday afternoon, when 100 business women, representing 10 Michigan Zonta Clubs, will convene at Bloomfield Township Park for the annual play day and district picnic. ## From A WOMAN'S ANGLE

By MARGARET ELAIN PORTER

Given a nervous man, irritated in enforced idleness, plus the over-worked wife, weary with additional household burdens, plus the weather—and the result is a domestic try-angle. The situation is trying from every angle. Its combination of elements contain enough explosive material to sink a ship—a matrimonial ship—at any rate, if care is not taken.

Margaret E. Porter

Every man whose professional or business activity has been temporarily suspended is a little more irritable than usual, and who, unoccupied, is forced to spend his days at home, is going through this trying period.

He is not used to this idea of sitting around the house, and the wife, who, in the garden, mowing the lawn, tinkering with the car, or saving garage bills, and trying with

Valentine Family To Hold Tenth Reunion

The Valentine family will hold their tenth annual reunion at the residence of Mrs. J. H. Valentine, Sunday, August 13, 1932. The family party will be held at the residence of Mrs. J. H. Valentine, 1111 North 11th street, 77 years old, is the oldest member of the reunion, and his great-grandson, Bobbin J. Valentine, of Detroit, will be present.

Mr. and Mrs. Valentine, their daughter, Mrs. Hazel Wallace of Detroit, their daughter, Mrs. J. H. Valentine, of Detroit, and their three children, Edgar, Richard and Bobbie, will represent the four generations.

Following an outdoor dinner at the residence of Mrs. J. H. Valentine, a social program, which will include games by Margaret and Helen Valentine, and a musical program, will be given by Miss Mary Valentine, of Detroit.

Miss Valentine is chairman of the reunion, and Mrs. J. H. Valentine is secretary. The Valentine family is one of the oldest in the city. Members of the family are: Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Valentine, of Detroit; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Valentine, of Detroit; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Valentine, of Detroit.

But she was younger then! Prosperity finally did come, and with it plenty of assistance. She has been years since she has done the washing, or ironed a shirt, or made a dress or darned socks!

She finds it takes her longer now! Trying to hurry, she grows nervous, and impatient with her husband and children. She is overtired, and yet, impelled by nervous energy, keeps going like a squirrel in a cage.

And the heat! Besides the physical discomfort it brings, it is an added strain on ragged nerves. Even in the best of circumstances, summer-weather is a trying test of domestic harmony. It is so easy to quarrel in hot weather!

Psychological, intense heat does something to one of his otherwise cool control and sense of balance. Hot weather added to a situation already strained, with husband weary and his temper ill, and wife biting her lip to keep from nagging or crying in her weariness from too much work, may result in disaster.

It may be just the spark needed to start a conflagration that may end in domestic ruin. Since there is no way of turning off the heat, the only safeguard lies in human understanding and control.

Surly the wife can understand. She should now, if never before in her married life, appreciate the golden worth of silence. If affection is what her husband needs and wants, she should natter him a little. Or, if attention annoys him, the wife thing is to leave him alone as long as he desires it.

And the husband may be guilty of being in self-pity! To be tender and patient, may require effort, but isn't it just a little cowardly to take his troubles out on the family?

He may be a good sport with men in cards or golf, why not show his sporting spirit at his home, when he is forced to spend his days with his family?

Unless these two, who have loved and married, conquer self, during these hot summer days when they are constantly in one another's company, self may rise in blind domination to conquer and kill their happiness for all time.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Z. Lander of East Maple road will entertain members of their bridge club at dinner Friday evening.

Considering Colors

The role played by color in mental and emotional development is enormous. For long time color tinctures played a part by using the same color for the whole ensemble. The entire instructor has given place to plain color of color combinations.

The color combinations used by the Longs members of dress jacket and green dress.
