RELATES WORK AT CRANBROOK

Oliver Describes Aims, Achievements Of Booth Benefaction

An intimate glimpse into the Cranbrook School project, with glances into the Kingswood School for Girls and Christ Church, together with a brief characterization of George G. Booth, who, with Mrs. Booth, are donors of the whole project, were given Birmingham Exchangites Tuesday noon by James L. Oliver. Mr. Oliver is secretary to Mr. Booth, as well as the Cranbrook Foundation. The latter is responsible for the design, building and equipping of the projects, after which they are turned over to a Board of Trustees, who operate them.

Mr. Oliver paid great tribute to the desire of Mr. Booth to invest beauty, harmony, as well as practicability, into the arts and crafts of life. He pointed out that Mr. Booth, since early boyhood, had developed a strong fondness for beautiful handicraft.

"The Cranbrook projects are but the outlet for Mr. Booth's innate love of the beautiful, and in Cranbrook he hopes to bring into the lives of boys and girls a great love for, and ability to execute, the beautiful in whatever phase of life work they may engage."

With the aid of blueprints, Mr. Oliver pointed out the immensity of the boys' and girls' schools, and said that, including students, 500 people live within the entire establishment. The property, exclusive of the Booth home and grounds, comprises more than 200 acres.

The buildings were designed by Eliel Saarinen, celebrated architect, and are among the greatest of modern American design in the world. Mr. Oliver spoke of the various art exhibits connected with the Cranbrook School, and revealed them as among the finest in printing and bookbinding, sculpture, drawing and painting, tapestry weaving, silversmith and iron work, and kindred arts and crafts.

Christ Church Cranbrook, the first of Mr. and Mrs. Booth's large gifts, was erected at a cost of $2,000,000. The entire Cranbrook project followed upon the heels of the original "meeting house," erected in 1918 at the corner of Lone Pine and Cranbrook roads, and now known as the Brookside School, for children in the neighborhood. Sunday services there were conducted by Mr. Booth's father, the late Henry Wood Booth.

Mr. Oliver concluded his talk by extending an invitation to the Exchangites, and their friends, as well as the general public, to visit the Cranbrook School, any week day except Saturday and Sunday, between 8:30 A. M. and 5 P. M.
