By E. M. CIPRIANI
 Central Press Correspondent
 CHICAGO—Because a woman is married is no reason, if she is employed, that she should give up her job. This is the opinion of Miss Jane Addams, internationally famous woman leader and co-winner of last year's Nobel peace prize.

Married Business Woman Defended By Jane Addams

Eighty percent of the government's revenue goes to the support of the army and navy and for pensions, and those of that sort. I think the government could naturally start to economize on that end.

Favors Sweeps Plan
 Miss Addams declared that she favors the Sweeps plan of limiting production to requirements. Over-production was one of the causes of the depression she said. She pointed out that the head of a lumber company told her that his organization could supply all the lumber required in the entire United States.

"And that is only one company out of many," she commented significantly.

World-wide conditions have not affected the social order, observed Miss Addams, but the social order has affected world-wide conditions. At Hull House, she said, classes are full many of the students being sent out of work.

"But there's nothing like a job," she said.

Refrigerator and prohibition received brief comment.

"I think his letter advocating whether or not his son should be an honest opinion, but I think he is wrong. He says there is more drinking. I believe that drinking has decreased. Drinking has decreased greatly among the working people. The young people drank merely to show off, and that has decreased too."

 Dr. Fred L. Tucker, local dentist: "I went trout fishing last week-end and running along the good old worm family for bait. I started to eat a fly. Guess I don't know how to wave it in the air long enough to make it do whatever it is supposed to do to enter trout or to bite it. But it was grand exercise while it lasted."
