CENSUS SHOWS 160 UNLICENSED DOGS

Negligent Owners Face Court Summons Unless They Comply With Ordinance

A total of 160 dog-owners whose dogs are not licensed in accordance with the village dog ordinance were revealed as the results of a census completed last week-end by a special officer. The owners are being notified of their negligence in letters sent out by Miss Irene Hanley, village clerk, and are being requested to secure the necessary license at once. Several of them have already complied with the request, Miss Hanley said. A reasonable length of time will be allowed the delinquent owners to comply with the license law ordinance, after which they will be summoned to justice court to answer charges of violating its provisions in accordance with a recent edict of Chief of Police John P. Hackitt and Village Manager James W. Parry.

Secures Public's Demands. Mr. Coryell believes the greatest need in Birmingham today, as well as in other municipalities, is for its citizens to adopt the attitude of "putting on the brakes" in their demands for governmental services. "In the past few years," he said, "the cry from every quarter has been 'Let the government do it' or 'Let the village do it.' A few years ago, for instance, when we had a grass fire we cut ourselves with the help of our neighbors, or when we had a snow storm we dug ourselves out of the drifts. Nowadays we expect tax-supported fire departments to extinguish our grass fires and governmental snow plows to push away the drifts. "I don't mean that I believe we should go back to shoveling our own snow drifts, but I do mean that the public should call a halt in asking government for more and more services. It's a thing that must be viewed from the standpoint of economy. Mr. Coryell is convinced the

HONORE ADDRESSES CONFERENCE HERE

Speeches Made by Independent Thinkers Do Not Retain Life

"The foundation of art is the utter necessity of intercourse with our fellow men, and art is the surest occasion for such intercourse as is to be considered as a word, making a national language possible, or as a national expression in which words are inadequate," Paul Honore, noted artist of Cranbrook, declared in an address at Cranbrook Auditorium Tuesday night. Mr. Honore was the speaker at one of the principal sessions of the annual summer conference of the Episcopal Diocese of Michigan, meeting this week at Cranbrook. His subject was "Art, Religion and Life."

His subject was "Art, Religion and Life." "These subjects have been under discussion for thousands of years and are still the latest current topics," he said. "However, I am coming to you as a voice crying in the wilderness in the hope of challenging you to independent thinking about the subject of art, religion and life without regard to school or creed." He continued by declaring that the same feeling for reverence and the necessity of a well organized mind and too little to that of orderly service the source upon which our minds depend. "The gift of perception with its infinite variety seems to me to be the divine spark by which mere matter is quickened into life and spiritual understanding, he declared, and the quality of this understanding stands in evidence in every man's attempt to express himself by whatever means he uses. "That is why the temples of worship of every people express the same feeling for reverence and spiritual aspiration. They are expressions of a universal compelling instinct to recognize a power greater than ourselves, and the thing that we so often overlook is that that force is constantly working through us whether we wish it or not. Burning or brilliant, the eternal principle of life is being expressed increasingly."
