Robt. P. Lamont, Jr., Bored With Society

Son Of Secretary Of Commerce Who Made Trip To Russia To

Robert P. Lamont, Jr., son of the secretary of commerce, became bored with society and business, and he is called two-thirds of the way around the world by the Russian government to advise it.

In 1926, he and two children, Mrs. Lamont is the daughter of William W. Kent, retired architect of New York City.

Business and society bored young Lamont when he returned to his home in Chicago following the world war. He yearned for broader vistas.

Lamont, who was graduated from Princeton in 1914, considers his ranch a business, and has built his herd of thoroughbred Herefords into one of the finest in the nation. He is a past president of the National Association of Hereford Breeders.

During a vacation trip in the visited the home of a friend near here. The beautiful foothills country in the shadow of the Rocky Mountains appealed to him to such an extent that he made arrangements to purchase a vast cattle ranch.

Lamont keeps a herd of 120 registered Herefords on the 7,000-acre ranch throughout the year. He also has 1,000 thoroughbred sheep.

Pictureque Estate
With his wife, the former Frances Kent of New York City, a talented sculptor and actress, he has made this ranch a splendid and pictureque estate.

Lamont is going about whether we like or don't like its form of government. We do not alter the quality of a fair exchange of business made. It is small wonder that Russia is not buying any more than it has in the United States.

On the Lamont estate are some of the finest trout streams and lakes in this part of the country. In one area grotesque sandstone formations loom in strange and weird disorder.

But the Russians are determined to improve them, think they will. My report probably gave them a shock as I wasn't sparing in my criticism.

White Lamont, who in past years has performed in several amateur theatricals, left the ranch and obtained for himself a part in "Rain," the stage play made famous by Jeanne Eagles. Mrs. Lamont was cast as "Sadie Thompson," and critics paid high tribute to her ability.

But mainly her activity has been confined to sculpturing and designing. For a time she was student under Solon Borglum, a brother of Gutzon Borglum.

Her sculptures have been exhibited in New York, Cleveland and Denver.

An Open Letter To Depositors
OF THE
FIRST STATE SAVINGS BANK

It is possible to again open the First State Savings Bank for business. Under very similar conditions The State Bank at Ypsilanti was opened last December—it doing a good business, and earned $17,000.00 in the first four months for the depositors. The opening of this Bank greatly helped Ypsilanti. The opening of your Bank will certainly help Birmingham.

Your Committee must have your co-operation at once. Some 1200 depositors have signed the re-opening plan. We have not heard from you.

Unless we do hear from you and the other depositors who have not signed the agreement, the Banking Commission will order the Receiver to proceed to liquidate the assets. This will mean a return to the depositor of perhaps 40% of his or her deposits over a period of the next four or five years.

Under the re-opening plan the depositors will surely receive much more than 40%—and interest. It is quite probable that with proper co-operation the depositor will get all of his or her money back—plus interest. It's worth a try.

Your Committee is trying to help you—without any pay and at a considerable cost in time to them. Surely you should be willing to co-operate when it is your own money at stake. You have everything to gain and nothing to lose.

Why not act at once in this matter, and save your deposits, instead of having them imperilled through forced liquidation by the receiver. We will gladly answer any questions regarding the plan at any time. You will find a representative of the Committee in the lobby of the Bank. Don't wait for someone to call on you.

Yours very truly,
HARRY ALLEN,
WILLIAMS C. HARRIS,
STANLEY PEABODY,
Depositors' Committee.

Obliterate Party Lines,
Samuel Seabury Pleads

Head of New York City
[Samuel Seabury was born in New York City and practiced law there until he was elected as justice of the supreme court of New York from the first district on Jan. 1, 1907. He resigned in 1914, and was elected associate justice of the Court of Appeals in 1915. He resigned in 1916 to resume private law practice. Later, in 1916, Seabury was defeated in Democratic candidate for governor of New York. His efforts as counsel for the Hottel-Leprie Committee, which investigated the City affairs, have attracted nationwide attention. His name is in the "Who's Who" of New York.]

CONDITIONS in the municipal government of New York are deplorable. While the depression is working a hardship on the plain citizen, the people who are living in the lap of luxury are coming to do away with him. The time has come to do away with him at home, bulging with money, as well as the bulging pockets of the politicians. It is time to obliterate party lines. The nation has been a more trying time than it did in the World War. It is time to put into effect honorable men who will uphold the principles on which the country was founded. To do this the electorate must do its own thinking and not be led by politicians and self-appointed leaders. If the people want better government it is up to the people to have it. Corrupt politicians will not give it to them.

Eyes Congress at 25

Gwyn Sanders, 23-year-old prosecuting attorney of Marysville, O., has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination in congress from the seventh Ohio district. He is the youngest proponent in his state and one of the youngest in the country.
