Traditions Of East Give Way To Girl Guide Movement, Commissioner Learns

Girl Guiding is breaking down the old caste system in India, according to a Girl Scout leader here, Mrs. L. A. White, Birmingham Girl Scout Commissioner.

Authority for the statement regarding the caste system in India is the English sister of the American Girl Scouts, Miss Richards, former general secretary of the organization which has also done Guide work in South Africa, has been in this country for two months, during which time she visited Girl Scout camps in California, Colorado, Virginia and New York. Before her return to England, where she will superintend Balton-Foxwell, Chief Guide for further orders, Miss Richards spent several days at Camp Edith May, national Girl Scout headquarters, where she observed the training school at Briarcliff Manor, N. Y.

"There are about 22,000 Girl Guides in India at this time," Miss Richards said, "and they represent many different races, religions and castes. They are all working to be more grounded in their Girl Guide companies. They all share the same experiences and in many cases out-through it they can do much for the girls of their country. They play the same games and have practically the same program that is offered to Girl Guides and Girl Scouts in the thirty countries in which the movement is organized. In India we stress the training in child welfare, even for children under twelve, because the girls here marry when they are so young, and know so little of hygiene.

Girl Guides in India wear their national dress or saris which is usually of dark blue material, from seven to thirteen yards long, worn draped around the body and pinned over the left shoulder with the international trefoil. These national costumes are so graceful and so becoming that Girl Guide leaders have never tried to find Indian cloth to use in uniforms, Miss Richards explained.

"Oh, but I can't," the Red explained. "I'm staying at breakfast this morning."

Miss Richards explained that such participation in the mental part of the camp routine is entirely optional for Indian Girl Guides. Those of high rank and that the Red's example was of ineluctable value toward overcoming the caste prejudices of all the girls of her territory.

"The desire to serve their country is very strong in all Indian," Miss Richards declared. "The women who take training in Girl Guiding feel that

From A WOMAN'S ANGLE

By MARGORIE ELAINE PETER

The Stark Nine just don't know how to do with their little bit of some old magazines when newspaper published about 25 years ago and want time to be had by it.

Richard Howe's artist-soul blossomed (but suddenly) in the passion of love after one phase from those haunting eyes, and Andrienne, poet and dreamer, was fostering a passion too mighty for that frail frame. Nor artist nor poet were destined to stir the slumbering depths of Vivian March, who's heart?

"Oh!," she said over and over again, "these men love me, and they want an answer! I wish I could love some good man. But I never can. I think my heart is dead and its ashes are over the sea."

"And that's what the world was reading 25 years ago!"

Mrs. L. M. Baker of Wadlington road with her daughters, the Misses Sally and Joan, returned home early today following a night on Friday following a joyous on of the "Old Trail," with Mr. and Mrs. Donald W. Bay of Lakeview drive.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Lyle of Dixie road will have as their guests for the week-end and holiday Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Blasier and their son, Cole, Toledo.

Grant Blake of London, Eng., who was the house-guest of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Gault of Cranbrook, left for New York Monday in honor of Mr. F. H. and Mrs. M. C. Warren of Columbia, O., the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Both, Mr. and Mrs. Gault were best at a dinner for 18 guests at the Orchard Lake County Club, Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Topping of Linden drive will be hosts at a dinner for 18 guests at the Bloomfield Hills Country Club Monday.

The women members of Barton Hills Country Club, Ann Arbor, will be guests of the women members of the Birmingham Golf Club for golf, luncheon and bridge Friday.

A group of Birmingham girls were guests for the day Wednesday at the summer home of Miss Jean Larson at Colchester, Ont., where the Misses Peggy Bailey, Mary Demore, Mrs. A. L. Barnden, Carol Cole, Anne Caldwell and Buelah Martin.

Hot tip-off, girls!

Said the editor: "He would do with this considerable emphasis on the costume, the woman who has it at all concerned with the shape of her hat or the way she does her hair."

But he didn't get away with that line, even 25 years ago.

With shrewd feminine insight, the fashion editor concluded:

"Any woman who does not accurately the real masculine ideal towards the feminine fashions. And what are these fashions just at the moment? Well, they are making completely for the diaphanous fabric. The feathered hat and the lace invention."

As to whether the "diaphanous fabric" belonged to the "feathered hat" or the "diaphanous fabric" is not quite clear. (Probably the voluminous petticoats made by the "diaphanous fabric.")

Leaving what the well-dressed woman should have worn 25 years ago, the editor's advice is in the new "crave" of the moment—"bridget white" which was knocking Newport dry.

In alarm the correspondent writes:

"Newport has the bridge what craze. So have Narragansett Pier and the Harbor, but it is Newport that the evidence is most virulent. Here pursuit of the game has become an obsession.

"Big sums of money are won and lost every day at the tables. The flushed face of the woman gambler can be seen daily in carriages that flash along Bellevue avenue. Her nervous, eager manner betrays her."

"At ordinary social functions she waits patiently for the ladies to depart in order that the elect few may creep away to the houses of the hostess or friends.

"Oh Mother, dear Mother, come home with me now!"

But here's a single it was bridge that put the girls out on their financial feet to wit:

"And then the golf club claims attention. The golf club had gone to seed.

"It was so far away it didn't offer any particular diversion after one had made the long journey out to the plant. It was a most unwanted property had come to the club. Bridge what did it.

"Confronted with a situation that spelled ruin for the club, the managers appointed a woman's committee to take matters in hand. Now the golf club has become one of the most popular institutions in Newport. Members are occasionally play golf as a recreation after several hours of consuming play at the tables.

"Here it is—this passion for bridge is seen at its height. One recent afternoon there were eight tables going. Among the items they laid out were the bridge. It is one of a young woman who has won enough during this season to buy a handsome automobile."

Now lie that!
