Thumb-nail Sketches of Birmingham Business Leaders

Compared with building automobiles or serving as quarter-master on a naval destroyer, managing a gasoline service station has them all beaten, in the opinion of R. C. Mountain, proprietor of the Mountain Texaco Super-Service Station, South Woodward Avenue and Frank street.

Perhaps it's because the elements of courtesy and friendliness are so abundant in Mr. Mountain's personality and in those of the persons who work for him. Anyway, he has a warm greeting for all who come his way, and likes nothing better than a friendly chat behind the shifting scenes of busy industry.

—Armed Photo
Mr. Mountain is no my station just to buy gasoline. That isn't all there is in life," he philosophizes. Mr. Mountain spent 14 years in the auto building industry before taking over the proprietorship of the Texaco station here last Mar. 1.

He also spent 16 months in the war zone on the U. S. S. Destroyer Crowell during the World War, and in 1919 accompanied the international peace convoy around the world as first class quartermaster on the U. S. S. Destroyer Little.

Mr. Mountain was born in Ann Arbor, Mich., where he attended school and from where annual fishing and hunting excursions into the Maine woods during the days of his youth and young manhood developed habits by him that still enable him to derive his greatest pleasures from the rod and gun.

E. W. Osborne, whose nickname "Cy" is an un- detachable part of his origin is mysterious, has been the head dealer in Birmingham for nine out of the past 11 years and is probably as widely known as most people who have lived here since that length of time.

The two-year interruption in Mr. Osborne's proprietorship of the Ford agency in Birmingham occurred when he was transferred temporarily to take over the similar post in Auburn, Ind. Mr. Osborne was born in Detroit and moved to Royal Oak 20 years ago. Immediately after the World War, which he spent in training at Camp Upton on Long Island, he returned to Royal Oak and began selling Ford cars for the dealer there, remaining until 1921 when he moved to Birmingham to assume charge of the local agency.

Besides being a member of the Village Commission, Mr. Osborne is a past president of the Birmingham Exchange Club, a member of the American Legion, the Birmingham Masonic Lodge and Sigma Chi.

Just now one of his most exacting duties is that of helping to lift Birmingham's city charter as a member of the nine-man charter commission. Another is that of attempting to help restore some of the Rotarian Club's self prestige, now lost to its Rotary Club fairs.

Twenty years in the work of building and repairing internal combustion engines leaves little mystery attached to the intricacies of the gasoline motor for A. N. Badgley, proprietor of the Packard Service Company, 153 South Woodward Avenue.

Although he has been in business for himself here only since last Feb. 1, Mr. Badgley is not a stranger to residents of Birmingham and vicinity. For six years he was employed as service foreman for the Lawson-Lynch Company, both here and in Royal Oak, and previous to that time was associated with the automobile industry for several years in

Detroit. Born in Benton Harbor, Mr. Badgley got his first introduction to motors in a machine shop there. When the shop was taken over by the Truscott Boat Company of St. Joseph, then the largest builders of gas propelled boats in the world, he naturally became a part of the organization.

He remained there for four years, doing everything from testing to building motors. His first experience at automobile building came with the Chalmers Motor Company, and later he joined the Dodge organization when it first began to manufacture cars in 1915.

His business here is not his first independent commercial venture, for at one time he owned and managed a successful auto repair shop on Detroit's west side.
