Demand at the Municipal Building for application blanks for the Home Owners Loan Corporation has ceased almost entirely, according to Deputy City Clerk Donald C. Egbert who is in charge of distributing the blanks. The absence of the regular blanks, who is on her vacation. This is due to the fact that Birmingham home owners aren't in need of loan to save their property from foreclosure, but it is the fact that they are not applying on the basis of the fact that people aren't yet fully aware that the blanks are available here.

Another needy Birmingham boy is enjoying the fun and inspiration of a two-week vacation at a Boy Scout camp as the result of the fund solicited by the Birmingham Boy Scout District Committee and the Birmingham Eccentric. One boy, returned last week-end camp, made possible through contributions to the fund, and another was able to go this week when final donations brought the fund up to the quota. Both boys are sons of widows and are unable to afford vacations at their own expense.

BOOTLEGGERS MAY BE FREED

Many Pardons Likely As Soon As Dry Law Is Repealed

By CHARLES P. STEWART
Central Press Staff Writer
WASHINGTON—The justice department has developed in the last few years a policy of "getting" folk of whom it disapproves. That policy will get well with a Fascist form of government, but staunch upholders of democracy look on it with considerable apprehension.

It ante-dates the present administration. All Capone's case has faded faintly at it.

Capone wanted to get away from the charges that it could not prove against him. Casting about for some impracticable offense that it could fasten on him, it hit on income tax dodging. No one, of course, sympathizes with Al. Besides, it was evident that he did dodge his income tax.

Capone "Framed"

Nevertheless, the fact was patent that he was "framed," as a matter of actual intention. That is to say, it was clear that his prosecutors did not particularly care what they got him for; the essential idea was to get him for SOMETHING.

Now comes up a discussion of the course to be pursued, in the event of the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment, toward the thousands of federal prisoners who will still be doing time for an offense which repeal will have outlawed.

What this course will be already has been intimated.

Of the convicted or accused bootleggers in the United States (there are about 4,600 in federal prisons and nearly as many more in local jails on federal charges), at least half are officially regarded as unimpracticable in the (criminal sense) criminal tendencies—as law-abiding chaps of the subject of Volsteadism, as the average individual.

The purpose of the justice department, it plainly has been signified, is to acquiesce in the pardoning or parole of this contingent as rapidly as may be.

No Amnesty

There will not, however, be a sweeping amnesty. Each case will be considered on its own merits. An amnesty is to be avoided because of the element whom the department considers inherently bad characters and prefers to keep locked up as long as possible.

No matter how they act there, they're in jail, and jail, in the justice department's opinion, is the best place for them.

The danger in a system of this sort is obvious.

It leaves too much to the discretion of the attorney general. The present incumbent's prejudice against gangsters and racketeers is all right, undoubtedly, but some future functionary may have a similar prejudice against mere Republicans or Democrats.

It is the precedent that liberty-lovers view with anxiety.
