

Ergasterion Club Actors Excel In Old Melodrama

"Ten Nights in a Barroom," the widely known melodrama founded on the novel of T. S. Arthur, with tableaux and extra-acts, was presented by the Ergasterion Club of Cranbrook High in the school auditorium Saturday evening. It was melodrama neither pure nor simple, but a happy medium, which could hardly have been more touchingly played.

Junior Highs Will Repeat Christmas Play Tonight

Birmingham junior high students will present their second performance of the Christmas cantata, "Why the Chimney Dings," at 7 o'clock this evening in the auditorium of Adams School. The first performance was given in the Barnum School Auditorium Monday evening.

things that might come under the jurisdiction of a student council. Students now have no direct voice in the way their school is conducted. They can merely express their desires. In a council they would have a body of students of their own class and age to which they could bring their problems.

Here we are at the Christmas season, and if you are at a loss as to what to buy your friends and teachers for presents, here are a few suggestions:

The junior class—A cash donation for its treasury, which we understand is rather flat. Wayne White—A good speech to make at commencement exercises.

More school parties so that they can decorate the gym. Fred Boynton—A steady girl. Dick Smith—A great deal of ambition.

According to Principal Hart, past conflicts over use of the floors was due to the fact that a definite schedule had not been drawn up.

Norman Getzinger stole the show with his portrayal of Little Mary, daughter of Joe Morgan, a drunkard "more to be pitied than despised." Not only were his offerings of such tender ballads as "Dear Father, Come Home with Me Now" and "I Won't Let You Insult Her" deserving of the hilarious reception they received, but his characterization of the amusing and difficult part could not have been better played by Little Mary herself.

Robert Peabody, portraying the part of Helen, a peasant, by heads the cast for this year's production. His younger brother, Steen, is played by Charles Pearce, and the part of the boy's uncle Bertel, is taken by Walter Forster.
