CONTRACT BRIDGE

Written For Central Press and The Birmingham Eccentric
By E. V. SHEPARD
FAMOUS BRIDGE TEACHER

THE JUMP assist frequently is most useful and enlightening, especially when the opening bidder has a minimum declaration and when there are slam hopes or when the side is vulnerable. It is probable that South never would have dared game on a simple assist by partner, and North might not have done so either, as North and South were vulnerable and East and West were not vulnerable.

THE USEFUL JUMP ASSIST

Of course the opening lead was the 6 of clubs, removing dummy's A. The declarer saw that he had to do one of two things: he had to cross-ruff the hands, or get rid of his own two losers in clubs, or else he had to establish a trick in spades in dummy upon which to discard a loser. Trying to establish the second suit, with the A-J-10 missing, appeared almost hopeless, as it would cause South to lose at least 2 tricks in the suit to establish it. After its establishment how was dummy to be entered to secure discards? Trumps had to be drawn to prevent an opponent from ruffing diamonds. Unless something could be established in spades, long diamonds would be no use. If something could be established in spades, South might not need to establish diamonds.

A low trump was led from dummy and won with declarer's K. He led the 10 of spades, and let it run, losing to East's Ace. As the best hope of defeating the contract was to establish a trick in spades, South was forced to play low, losing to East's Ace. South played his partner the desired ruff, but that was the third and last trick that the defenders won. East ruffed dummy by leading a low spade club. Dummy led his last trump, picking up all opposing hearts. The declarer was in with his K of diamonds. He won the next lead with dummy's J of spades. On the K of spades the declarer discarded his last losing club.
