

200 ATTENDED CONFERENCE

Annual Summer Convocation at Cranbrook Will Close Saturday

Approximately 200 persons, including both young and old and representing all sections of the state, are attending the second annual Cranbrook Summer Conference in session at Cranbrook this week.

The conference is sponsored by the religious education department of the Episcopal Diocese of Michigan. Rev. Warren L. Rorhry, rector of St. James' Episcopal Church in Birmingham, is the director.

The keynote of the conference, "Open Ways to God," was sounded Monday night by Rev. W. H. Brown, rector of Christ Church Cranbrook by Rev. Herbert Page, bishop of Michigan, who is acting as chaplain of the convocation. Numerous other leaders in the field of religious education are conducting classes in creative teaching and youth class periods.

One of the most interesting features of the conference is a demonstration school being conducted every morning at Brookside School. Approximately 100 children, ranging in age from five to 12 years, are enrolled.

The conference will close shortly after the latter service.

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—
"Birmingham needs some industries—not hatching shops or factories, but there are numerous others which would be acceptable and serve to make the community a self-sufficient. And I believe they could be secured."

There will be a service in Christ Church Cranbrook Friday evening in preparation for the annual Corporate Communion to be held at the church at 7:15 A. M. Saturday. The conference will close shortly after the latter service.

branch north of 9th and Quanton road omitted, at a cost of $393,000. Mr. Drury recommended this last plan as the most advisable at the present time.

All of the plans called for the plant itself to be located at Thirteenth Mile and Lambert roads. Between 15 and 20 acres of land would be needed for the plant. Mr. Drury said, and between two and three miles of right-of-way would have to be secured for an approach.

Mr. Drury estimated the annual cost of operating a plant designed to serve Birmingham's needs alone at $14,000, and that of a system in which municipalities to be treated would also participate at $18,000.

Petitions for the construction of an Eton road sewer, which would prevent flooded conditions in the vicinity of the Grand Truck station and right-of-way in times of heavy rains, were presented to the County Drain Commission a few days ago. The assessment district was laid out at that time, but actual construction was not begun.

Would Be County Project
The new petitions, now being circulated among the original petitioners, ask that the rolls be reaffirmed and construction be begun immediately under the National Recovery Act. The sewer district was laid out at that time, but actual construction was not begun.

Rites Today For
Mary Ann Logan
Funeral services will be held at 2 P. M. today for Miss Mary Ann Logan, one of the Birmingham's oldest residents, who died Tuesday evening at her home, 544 Townsend street. She would have been 92 years old next Tuesday.

Miss Logan was the sister of the late F. Logan, widely known in this section as an employee of the old Elix and Nixon Feed Store for 35 years. Miss Logan had lived all her life with her brother who preceded her death last May 29.

Miss Logan was born in Rochester, N. Y., coming to Southfield Township with her family when she was 14 years old. She had lived in Birmingham 32 years.

The services will be held from the S. O. White Bell Home for Funerals with burial in Greenwood cemetery. Rev. S. I. Acheson, pastor of the Southfield United Presbyterian Church will officiate.

players of The Eccentric. The fund, made up voluntarily from several small contributions, will pay the entire cost of the boys' recesses during the summer.

Saturday was a genuine red-letter day in the lives of 117 youthful inmates of the Detroit Protestant Orphan Asylum on Longfield street. As guests of Howard C. Holah, manager of the Birmingham Theater, they attended the children's matinee at 2 P. M. and 70 inmates of the orphanage have been invited to attend the theater at successive Saturday matinees during the next few weeks.

The days when Detroit was looked down upon by Toledo with "lily-concealed disdain," and when Lafayette Avenue "was set aside for sleigh-tracks where the elite of the town could be seen any fine winter afternoon, in their fashionable townsmen's burred under their ubiquitous buffalo robes and bearskins," are described by Hugo Erickson in his 416-page volume, in an article entitled "My Memories of Old Detroit," the least interesting feature of the article is the series of illustrations, which accompanies it, including several of the author as a child, a boy and a young man.

Osborne's Motion Loses
Later in the afternoon, Mayor Allen and Mr. Packard sided with Commissioner A. J. Brandt when he declared that "I think we are safe in taking one-third of the welfare, but not more than that."

Mr. Osborne, however, demanded that a motion of his, to reduce the item by $18,000, be put to a vote. It lost 6 to 1.

Commissioners Clarence Vliet and Harry Allen, who sided with Mr. Brandt, that reduction should be reflected in other items throughout the budget where possible, and not be confined to the welfare appropriation.

"We've got to bare the whole budget more than we have before," Mr. McBride declared. "I believe salaries could be still further reduced."

"That's your idea," Mr. Packard countered. "We've worked for hours now spring everywhere we could."

Tax Relinquish Cited
"What if you get only 30 or 40 per cent of your taxes?" Mr. Vliet asked.

"If we don't get it, we won't spend it, of course," Mr. Packard retorted.

"You haven't been getting in the past," Mr. Vliet rejoined, "but you're now borrowing from the water department and from Peter to pay Paul. The question is, when are you going to get down to the cash basis? We haven't even been honest with ourselves nor with the public."

"Plenty of reductions can still be made in this budget," Mr. McBride joined in.
