

MONROE NEXT MAROON FOE

Maple Cagers, With 2 Defeats, 1 Victory, Play Again Friday

With two defeats and one victory on its slate, the Baldwin High School basketball team will meet its fourth opponent of the season Friday night. The foe will be Monroe High School and the game will be played on the Monroe court. Both the first and second teams have games scheduled, the first killed to start at 7 o'clock.

The Maples' two defeats were handed out by an alumni quintet and by Dearborn High. The Maroons defeated Rochester in their second game of the season, and Coach Franklin Whitney does not believe that either of the two defeats reflects the true caliber of his team.

"Dearborn the two or three weeks' start on us a practice, and therefore had a decided advantage over the Baldwin outfit," the coach said. "Although I used two football men in this game, neither of them had any practice and did not prove very valuable to us. Should we meet Dearborn again this season, and we might in the state tournament this spring, I doubt that we would have a hard time in defeating them."

"An alumni team should be better than the varsity because the members have played basketball much longer. The reason the varsity has usually won in the past is because those playing for the Charles E. James, executive vice-president, Birmingham National Bank, in his estimation, the new federal deposit insurance law should be an aid to business recovery because it should bring money out of hiding. It has given banks deposits the same protection extended to postal savings. There is no longer any reason for keeping money in cash boxes."

alumni were out of training and needed practice. This year nearly every boy that played for the alumni also was in condition.

The coach does not offer these statements as excuses for his defeats, however. He believes that his team will undoubtedly be more successful in future contests, and that those who are judging his players by their first games are being unfair.

One major problem has been puzzling the coach since practice started. This problem is the height of the team. Whitney said only ten men on the squad will graduate in February and Whitney hesitates to use men who he wants to give experience to the men that will play the entire season.

As yet Whitney is not set on any definite lineup. He is still experimenting, and the only two players he is at all sure of are the forward posts. These are occupied by Fred Schwarze and Kenneth McBride, who will probably hold their positions permanently. The other three posts are still to be filled.

Whitney said it would probably be two or three weeks before he would be able to select a team that was composed of what he is certain are his best players.

The fall of 1933 was the first time in several years that Baldwin had a debating team. Shortage of teachers at Baldwin was the reason for this. Expense of this activity. As debating involves the activities of two or four students, it was considered the time of a teacher could not be spared to teach the team.

former coach, H. Earle Corbett, had been transferred to Dearborn School to assume principal's duties there. Miss Muriel Sturtz, instructor in English and social studies, was named as advisor of a club in public speaking and debating. No outside members in debating are scheduled.

Two of the boys' organizations, the Hi-Y and the Varsity clubs are still in existence, as is the Girl Reserve Group.

The Washington Group is "laying low." Last year when the banks closed with a large sum of this group's money on deposit, the club was not damaged and planned a trip to the World's Fair at Chicago, which was cheaper than the annual trip to the Capital City.

The Chicago trip was taken last spring. This fall the group met and organized. Members decided that a trip to Washington in the spring of '34 could not be planned. But the group is still one of Baldwin's organizations, and when business conditions improve slightly more, every Baldwin student will be able to look forward to a resumption of the annual Washington trip.

Because of the lack of an instructor, both the boys' and girls' chess clubs were discontinued in 1932. The membership of each of these clubs usually ran from 20 to 25.

The other two musical organizations at Baldwin, the band and orchestra, are groups that have not suffered with the depression. More than 100 students are active in the two at the present time.

The Dramatic Club is stronger and larger than it ever has been at Baldwin. Its membership numbers around 75.

Since 1931, five sports have been dropped from the Baldwin curriculum, each abandoned for a different reason. The five sports are golf, tennis, cross country, swimming and baseball.

But some activities have been added. The Girls Athletic Association, the Speech and Debate Club, the Science Club, the School Service Club and the Gymnastics Club have all been organized since 1931.

Except in the field of athletics, Baldwin students have about the same number of extra-curricular opportunities they had two years ago.

Cranbrook School Reopens Saturday

Cranbrook School students will resume their regular sessions on Saturday morning, after a Christmas recess of slightly over two weeks.

Originally, Friday had been set as the date for the reopening of classes, but on the request of the Prefect Council, student government organization, an extra vacation day was added and the schedule of classes for Friday was moved to Saturday.

The first semester at Cranbrook School will end Feb. 1, and the second half-year will begin the next day. Mid-year examinations will be held from Jan. 29 to Feb. 2.

STUDENT CHAPTER

By THE CHATTERBOX

While leafing through the pages of a 1931 Baldwin Ecenraic, the other day, the question popped into our mind: "Are there more or less activities at Baldwin than there were three years ago?" It might seem as though there were a great deal more things to do at Baldwin than there are in '31 than there are now. But such is not the case.

Our source of information, the Baldwinian, is one of the activities that is no more at Baldwin. In 1932 the yearbook, much smaller than usual, made its last appearance. Financial conditions were the reason for the discontinuance of publication.

Although the Maroon and White, formerly the official Baldwin newspaper, also became the victim of conditions and ceased publication, Baldwin students still edit a weekly paper. Expense of this activity. As debating involves the activities of two or four students, it was considered the time of a teacher could not be spared to teach the team.
